MR. CONGREVE.

WILLIAM CONGREVE descended from the ancient family of the Congreves, of Congreve in Staffordshire, his father being second son of Richard Congreve, of Congreve and Stratton. His family is of so great antiquity, that it claims a place among the few that extend their line beyond the Norman conquest. Once, at least, he visited the residence of his ancestors; and more places than one are still shewn, in groves and gardens, where his Old Bachelor is said to have been written.

The time and place of his birth are not certainly known; though the inscription on his monument says he was born in 1672. As to the place of his birth, some authors, and in particular Sir James Ware, contend for his having been born in Ireland; but as Jacob, who was particularly acquainted with him, and who in his preface acknowledges his obligations to Mr. Congreve, for his communications of what related to himself, has absolutely contradicted that report, we shall on his authority, which may be considered the same as Mr. Congreve's own, fix the spot of his nativity at a place called Bardsa, not far from Leeds in Yorkshire, being part of the estate of Sir John Lewis, his great uncle by his mother's side.

Dr. Johnson observes, that to doubt whether a man of eminence has told the truth about his own birth, is, in appearance, to be very deficient in candour; yet nobody can live long without knowing, that falsehoods of convenience or vanity, falsehoods from which no evil immediately visible ensues, except the general degradation of human testimony, are very lightly uttered, and once uttered, are fully supported. Boileau, who desired to be thought a rigorous and steady moralist, having told a petty lie to Lewis XIV. continued it afterwards by false dates; thinking himself obliged in honour, says his admirer, to maintain what, when he said it, was so well received.

It is certain, however, that he went over to Ireland very young; for his father, being only a younger brother, and provided for in the army by a commission on the Irish establishment, was obliged to undertake a journey thither, in consequence of his command; which he afterwards parted with, to accept of the management of a considerable estate belonging to the Burlington family, which fixed his residence there. However, though he he suffered his son to receive his first tincture of letters in the school at Kilkenny, and afterwards to complete his classical learning under the direction of Dr. Ash, in the university of Dublin, yet, being desirous that his studies should be directed to profit as well as improvement, he sent him over to England soon after the Revolution, and placed him as a student in the Temple.

The dry and plodding study of the law, however, was by no means suitable to the sprightly and volatile genius of Mr. Congreve; and therefore, though he did not want approbation in those studies to which his genius led him, yet he did not even attempt to make any proficiency in a science, in which he probably was conscious he should make no figure.

In the very earliest emanation of his genius, his novel called Love and Duty reconciled, written when he was not above seventeen years of age, he had not only endeavoured at, but indeed succeeded in, the presenting to the world not a mere novel, according to the taste and fashion then prevailing, but a piece, that should point out, and be in itself a model of, what novels ought to be. Though this cannot with propriety be called a dramatic work, yet he has so strictly adhered to dramatic rules in the composition of it, that his arriving at so great a degree of perfection in the regular drama in so short a time afterwards, is hardly to be wondered at. Dr.

Johnson, however, speaking of this novel, says, "I would rather praise it than read it."

The first dramatic piece he produced was, The Old Bachelor; of which he says, in his defence against Collier, "That comedy was written, as several know, some years before it was acted. When I wrote it, I had little thoughts of the stage; but did it, to amuse myself, in a slow recovery from a fit of sickness. Afterwards, through my indiscretion, it was seen, and in some little time more it was acted; and I, through the remainder of my indiscretion, suffered myself to be drawn in, to the prosecution of a difficult and thankless study, and to be involved in a perpetual war with knaves and fools."

There seems to be, says Dr. Johnson, a strange affectation in authors, of appearing to have done every thing by chance. The Old Bachelor was written for amusement, in the languor of convalescence. Yet it is apparently composed with great elaborateness of dialogue, and incessant ambition of wit. The age of the writer considered, it is indeed a very wonderful performance; for, whenever written, it was acted in 1693, when he was not more than twenty-one years old, and was then recommended by Mr. Dryden, Mr. Southern, and Mr. Maynwaring. Dryden said, that he never had seen such a fine play; but they found it deficient in some things necessary to the success of its exhibition, tion, and by their greater experience fitted it for the stage. Southern used to relate of one comedy, probably of this, that when Congreve read it to the players, he pronounced it so wretchedly that they had almost rejected it; but they were afterwards so well persuaded of its excellence, that, for half a year before it was acted, the manager allowed its author the privilege of the house.

A comedy like this, written at such an age, requires some consideration. As the lighter species of dramatic poetry professes the imitation of common life, of real manners, and daily incidents, it apparently presupposes a familiar knowledge of many characters, and exact observation of the passing world. It must therefore be difficult to conceive how a boy could obtain this knowledge.

If we examine The Old Bachelor more nearly, we shall find it to be one of those comedies, which may be made by a mind vigorous and acute, and furnished with comic characters by the perusal of other poets, without much actual commerce with mankind. The dialogue is one constant change of conceits, or clash of wit, in which nothing flows necessarily from the occasion, or is dictated by nature. The characters both of men and women are either fictitious and artificial, as those of Hartwell and the ladies; or easy and common, as Wittol a tame idiot, Bluff a swaggering coward, and Fondlewife a jealous puritan; and the catastrophe arises from a mistake mistake not very probably produced, by marrying a woman in a mask. Yet this gay comedy, when all these deductions are made, will remain the work of very powerful and fertile faculties. The dialogue is quick and sparkling, and the incidents such as seize and fix the attention.

There are perhaps few plays that have proved so advantageous to the writer; for the merits of his first piece obtained him the favour and patronage of Lord Halifax, and some peculiar marks of distinction from Queen Mary, on whose death he wrote an elegiac pastoral, of which we shall speak hereafter. The earl of Halifax, who was then the Mæcenas of the age, desirous of raising so promising a genius above the necessity of too hasty productions, made him one of the commissioners for licensing hackney-coaches. He soon after bestowed on him a place in the pipe-office, and not long after that gave him a post in the customs, worth six hundred pounds per annum. In 1714, he was appointed a commissioner of wine-licences, and in the course of the same year was nominated secretary of Jamaica. Thus his income, added all together, was, in the latter part of his life, upwards of twelve hundred pounds a year.

But let us return to the year 1695, when Brereton opened the new house in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. Mr. Congreve joining with him, gave him his comedy of Love for Love, with which the company opened their campaign, and which met with such success, that they immediately offered the author a share in the profits of the house, on condition of his producing them a new play yearly.

This offer he accepted; but whether through indolence, or that correctness, which he looked on as necessary to his works, his Mourning Bride did not come out till 1697, nor his Way of the World till two years after that. This last piece, as well as his Double Dealer, which he wrote in 1694, for what reason we know not, did not meet the approbation of the public. Whatever objections may be made, either to his comic or tragic excellence, they are lost at once in the blaze of admiration, when it is remembered, that he produced these four plays before he had passed his twenty-fifth year; before other men, even such as are some time to shine in eminence, have passed their probation of literature, or presume to hope for any other notice than such as is bestowed on diligence and inquiry. Among all the efforts of early genius, which literary history records, it is to be doubted, whether any one can be produced, that more surpasses the common limits of nature than the plays of Congreve.

About this time began the long-continued controversy between Collier and the poets. In the reign of Charles the First, the Puritans had raised a violent clamour against the drama, which they considered as an entertainment not lawful to Christians, an opinion held by them in common with the church of Rome; and Prynne published Histrio-mastix, a huge volume, in which stage-plays were censured. The outrages and crimes of the Puritans afterwards brought their whole system of doctrine into disrepute, and from the Restoration the poets and the players were left at quiet; for to have molested them would have had the appearance of tendency to puritanical malignity.

Time, however, wore away this danger; and Collier, a fierce and implacable Nonjuror, knew that an attack upon the theatre would never make him suspected for a Puritan. In 1698, he therefore published A short View of the Immorality and Profaneness of the English Stage, perhaps with no other motive than religious zeal and honest indignation. He was formed for a controvertist; with sufficient learning; with diction vehement and pointed, though often vulgar and incorrect; with unconquerable pertinacity; with wit in the highest degree keen and sarcastic; and with all those powers exalted and invigorated by a just confidence in his cause.

Thus qualified, and thus incited, he walked out to battle, and at once assailed most of the living writers, from Dryden to Dursley. His onset was violent. Those passages, which, while they stood single, had passed with little notice, when they were accumulated and exposed together, excited horror:

the wise and the pious caught the alarm, and the nation wondered why it had so long suffered irreligion and licentiousness to be openly taught at the public expence.

The poets had now nothing left but to resist or fly. Dryden's conscience or his prudence, angry as he was, withheld him from the conflict; but Congreve and Vanbrugh attempted answers. Congreve, a very young man, elated with success, and impatient of censure, assumed an air of confidence and security. His chief artifice of controversy is to retort upon his adversary his own words; he is very angry, and, hoping to conquer Collier with his own weapons, allows himself in the use of every term of contumely and contempt; but he has the sword without the arm of Scanderbeg; he has the coarseness of his antagonist, but not his strength. Collier replied; for contest was his delight: he was not to be frightened from his purpose or his prey.

Congreve could not properly support his cause. Whatever glosses he might use for the defence or palliation of single passages, the general tenor and tendency of his plays must always be condemned. It is acknowledged with universal conviction, that the perusal of his works will not much mend the morals: and that their ultimate effect is to represent pleasure in alliance with vice, and to relax those obligations by which life ought to be regulated.

The

The stage found other advocates, and the dispute was protracted through ten years; but at last comedy grew more modest, and Collier lived to see the reward of his labour in the reformation of the theatre.

Though this quarrel is believed to have created in him some disgust to the stage, yet he afterward brought on his Way of the World, of which it gave so just a picture, that the world seemed resolved not to hear it. This completed the disgust of our author to the theatre; upon which the celebrated critic Dennis said a very fine and a very kind thing, though he was not very famous for either, that "Mr. Congreve quitted the stage early, and that comedy left it with him." This play, however, has long since triumphed over its adversaries, and is now as justly esteemed as it ought to be. He afterwards amused himself with composing original poems, and writing translations, which he collected into a volume, and published in 1710; when Swift describes him as "never free from the gout, and almost blind; yet amusing himself with writing a Tatler." He had a fine taste for music as well as poetry, as appears from his Hymn to Harmony in Honour of St. Cecilia's Day, 1701, set by Mr. John Eccles, his great friend, to whom he was also obliged for setting several of his songs. His early acquaintance with the great had procured him an easy and independent station station in life, to which it is very rare, that either true genius or literary merit of any kind recommends a man. This freed him from all obligations of courting the public favour any longer.

However, he was still under the tie of gratitude to his illustrious patron; and as he never missed an opportunity of paying his compliments to him, so, on the other hand, he always shewed great regard to persons of a less exalted station, who had been serviceable to him on his entrance into public life.

He wrote an epilogue for his old friend Southern's tragedy of Oroonoko; and we learn from Dryden himself, how much he was obliged to his assistance in the translation of Virgil. "Mr. Congreve (says he) has done me the favour to review the Æneis, and to compare my version with the original. I shall never be ashamed to own, that this excellent young man has shewed me many faults, which I have endeavoured to correct." He contributed also the eleventh satire to the translation of Juvenal, published by that great poet, and wrote an excellent copy of verses on the translation of Persius, performed by Dryden alone. T. Cibber, in the Lives of his Poets, relates an anecdote of him, which cannot be properly omitted here. "When the celebrated Voltaire (says he) was in England, he waited upon Congreve, and paid him some compliments, as to the reputation
" and

“and merits of his works. Congreve thanked “him, but at the same time told that ingenious fo“reigner, that he did not choose to be considered as “an author, but only as a private gentleman,
 “and in that light expected to be visited. Voltaire “answered, that if he had been nothing but a “private gentleman, in all probability, he should “never have troubled him with a visit. Voltaire “observes, in his own account of this transaction,
 “that he was not a little disgusted with so unsea-
 “sonable a piece of vanity.”

The greater part of the last twenty years of his life was spent in ease and retirement; but, towards the end of it, he was much afflicted with the gout, which brought on a gradual decay. It was on this account that, in the summer of 1728, he went to Bath for the benefit of the waters, where he had the misfortune to be overturned in his chariot. From this time he complained of a pain in his side, which was supposed to arise from some inward bruise. Upon his return to London, his health declined rapidly, and he died at his house, in Surry-street, in the Strand, Jan. 19, 1728-9.

On the 26th of that month, his corpse lay in state in the Jerusalem chamber; from whence, the same evening, it was carried with great solemnity into Henry the Seventh's chapel at Westminster, and afterwards interred in the Abbey. The pall was

was supported by the Duke of Bridgewater, Earl of Godolphin, Lord Cobham, Lord Wilmington, the Honourable George Berkeley, and Brigadier-General Churchill; and Colonel Congreve followed as chief mourner.

Some time after, a neat and elegant monument was erected to his memory, by Henrietta Duchess of Marlborough, to whom he bequeathed a legacy of about ten thousand pounds, the accumulation of attentive parsimony, which, though to her superfluous and useless, might have given great assistance to the ancient family from which he descended, at that time, from the imprudence of his relations, reduced to difficulties and distress.

On his monument was engraved the following inscription. "Mr. William Congreve died January 19, 1728, aged fifty-six, and was buried near this place, to whose most valuable memory this monument is set up by Henrietta Duchess of Marlborough, as a mark how dearly she remembers the happiness and honour she enjoyed in the sincere friendship of so worthy and honest a man, whose virtue, candour, and wit, gained him the love and esteem of the present age, and whose writings will be the admiration of the future." It has been observed of Congreve, that no man ever passed through life with more ease and less envy than he. No change of ministers affected him in the least, nor was he ever removed from any post that was given him, unless to a better. Though he lived in an elegant manner, yet he saved, by prudent management, a competent fortune. He was always upon good terms with the wits of his time, and never involved in any of their quarrels, or received from any of them the least mark of dislike or dissatisfaction. On the contrary, they were solicitous for his approbation, and received it as the highest sanction of merit. Addison testified his personal regard for him, and his high esteem of his writings, upon many occasions. Steele considered him as his patron at one time, and at another was desirous of making him an umpire. Even Pope, who was said to be jealous of his poetical character, honoured him with the highest testimony of deference and esteem.

His dramatic pieces were seven in number, and their titles as follow. —

1. The Old Bachelor, a comedy, 4to. 1693.
2. The Double Dealer, a comedy, 4to. 1694.
3. Love for Love, a comedy, 4to. 1695.
4. The Mourning Bride, a tragedy, 4to. 1697.
5. The Way of the World, a comedy, 4to. 1700.
6. The Judgment of Paris, a masque, 4to. 1701.
7. Semele, an opera, 4to. 1707.

We shall conclude our account of the life of Congreve, with the critique of Dr. Johnson on the abilities of this writer.

in the least, nor was he ever removed from Congreve, says he, has abilities of the highest kind; he is an original writer, who borrowed neither the models of his plot, nor the manner of his dialogue. Of his plays I cannot speak distinctly, for since I inspected them, many years have passed; but what remains upon my memory is, that his characters are commonly fictitious and artificial, with very little of nature, and not much of life. He formed a peculiar idea of comic excellence, which he supposed to consist in gay remarks and unexpected answers; but that which he attempted he seldom failed of performing. His scenes exhibit not much of humour, imagery or passion; his personages are a kind of intellectual gladiators; every sentence is to ward or stile; the contest of smartness is never intermitted; his wit is a meteor playing to and fro with alternate coruscations. His comedies have therefore, in some degree, the operation of tragedies; they surprise rather than divert, and oftener raise admiration than merriment. But they are the works of a mind replete with images, and quick in combination.

Of his miscellaneous poetry, I cannot say any thing very favourable. The powers of Congreve seem to desert him when he leaves the stage, as Antæus was no longer strong than he could touch the ground. It cannot be observed without wonder, that a mind so vigorous and fertile in dramatic compositions should, on any other occasion, discover nothing

nothing but impotence and poverty? He has, in these little pieces, neither elevation of fancy, selection of language, nor skill in versification; yet, if I were required to select from the whole mass of English poetry the most poetical paragraph, I know not what I could prefer to this exclamation in the Mourning Bride.

Almeria. It was a fancied noise; for all is hush'd.

Leonora. It bore the accent of a human voice.

Almeria. It was thy fear, or else some transient wind
Whistling thro' hollows of this vaulted isle:
We'll listen.

Almeria. Hark!

Leon. No, all is hush'd, and still as death.—'Tis dreadful!
How reverend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose ancient pillars rear their marble heads,
To bear aloft its arch'd and ponderous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immovable,
Looking tranquillity! It strikes an awe
And terror on my aching sight; the tombs
And monumental caves of death look cold,
And shoot a chillness to my trembling heart.
Give me thy hand, and let me hear thy voice;
Nay, quickly speak to me, and let me hear
Thy voice—my own affrights me with its echoes.

He who reads these lines, enjoys for a moment the powers of the poet; he feels what he remembers to have felt before, but he feels it with great increase of sensibility; he recognizes a familiar image, but meets it again amplified and expanded, embellished lished with beauty, and enlarged with majesty. Yet could the author, who appears here to have enjoyed the confidence of Nature, lament the death of Queen Mary in lines like these.

The rocks are cleft, and new-descending rills
Furrow the brows of all th' impending hills.
The water-gods to floods their rivulets turn,
And each with streaming eyes supplies his wanting urn.
The Fauns forsake the woods, the Nymphs the grove,
And round the plain in sad distraction rove:
In prickly brakes their tender limbs they tear,
And leave on thorns their locks of golden hair.
With their sharp nails, themselves the Satyrs wound,
And tug their shaggy beards, and bite with grief the ground.
Lo! Pan himself, beneath a blasted oak,
Dejected lies, his pipe in pieces broke.
See Pales weeping too, in wild despair,
And to the piercing winds her bosom bare.
And see yon fading myrtle, where appears
The Queen of Love, all bath'd in flowing tears:
See how she wrings her hands, and beats her breast,
And tears her useless girdle from her waist:
Hear the sad murmurs of her sighing doves!
For grief they sigh, forgetful of their loves.

And many years after, he gave no proof that time had improved his wisdom or his wit; for, on the death of the Marquis of Blandford, this was his song.

And now the winds, which had so long been still,
Began the swelling air with sighs to fill:

The

The water-nymphs, who motionless remain'd,
Like images of ice, while she complain'd,
Now loos'd their streams: as when descending rains
Roll the steep torrents headlong o'er the plains.
The prone creation, who so long had gaz'd,
Charm'd with her cries, and at her griefs amaz'd,
Began to roar and howl with horrid yell,
Dismal to hear, and terrible to tell;
Nothing but groans and sighs were heard around;
And Echo multiplied each mournful sound.

In both these funeral poems, when he has yell'd out many syllables of senseless delour, he dismisses his reader with senseless consolation. From the grave of Pastora rises a light that forms a star; and where Amaryllis wept for Amyntas, from every tear sprung up a violet. But William is his hero, and of William he will sing:

The hovering winds on downy wings shall wait around,
And catch, and waft to foreign lands, the flying sound.

It cannot but be proper to shew what they shall have to catch and carry:

'Twas now, when flowery lawns the prospect made,
And flowing brooks beneath a forest shade,
A lowing heifer, loveliest of the herd,
Stood feeding by; while two fierce bulls prepar'd
Their armed heads for fight; by fate of war to prove
The victor worthy of the fair one's love.
Unthought presage of what met next my view;
For soon the shady scene withdrew,
And now, for woods, and fields, and springing flowers,
Behold a town arise, bulwark'd with walls and lofty towers;

Two rival armies all the plain o'erspread,
 Each in battalia rang'd, and shining arms array'd;
 With eager eyes beholding both from far,
 Namur, the prize and mistress of the war.

The Birth of the Muse is a miserable fiction. One good line it has, which was borrowed from Dryden. The concluding verses are these:

This said, no more remain'd. The eth'ral host
 Again impatient crowd the crystal coast.
 The father, now, within his spacious hands,
 Encompass'd all the mingled mass of seas and lands;
 And, having heav'd aloft the ponderous sphere,
 He launch'd the world to float in ambient air.

Of his irregular poems, that to Mrs. Arabella Hunt seems to be the best. His Ode for Cecilia's Day, however, has some lines, which Pope had in his mind when he wrote his own.

His imitations of Horace are feebly paraphrastical, and the additions which he makes are of little value. He sometimes retains what were more properly omitted, as when he talks of vervain and gums to propitiate Venus.

Of his translations, the Satire of Juvenal was written very early, and may therefore be forgiven, though it have not the massiness and vigour of the original. In all his versions, strength and sprightliness are wanting: his Hymn to Venus, from Homer, is perhaps the best. His lines are weakened with expletives, and his rhymes are frequently imperfect.

His petty poems are seldom worth the cost of criticism; sometimes the thoughts are false, and sometimes common. In his verses on Lady Gethin, the latter part is an imitation of Dryden's Ode on Mrs. Killigrew; and Doris, that has been so lavishly flattered by Steele, has indeed some lively stanzas, but the expression might be mended; and the most striking part of the character had been already shown in Love for Love. His Art of Pleasing is founded on a vulgar but perhaps impracticable principle, and the staleness of the verse is not concealed by any novelty of illustration or elegance of diction.

This tissue of poetry, from which he seems to have hoped a lasting name, is totally neglected, and known only as it is appended to his plays. While comedy or while tragedy is regarded, his plays are likely to be read; but except what relates to the stage, I know not that he has ever written a stanza that is sung, or a couplet that is quoted. The general character of his Miscellanies is, that they shew little wit, and little virtue.

Yet to him it must be confessed (concludes Dr. Johnson), that we are indebted for the correction of a national error, and for the cure of our Pindaric madness. He first taught the English writers, that Pindar's odes were regular; and, though certainly he had not the fire requisite for the higher species of lyric poetry, he has shewn us, that enthusiasm has its rules, and that in mere confusion there is neither grace nor greatness.

HORAT. LIB. II. E. 1.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

C H A R L E S,

Lord CLIFFORD of LANESBOROUGH, &c.

MY LORD,

IT is with a great deal of pleasure, that I lay hold on this first occasion, which the accidents of my life have given me, of writing to your Lordship: for, since at the same time I write to all the world, it will be a means of publishing (what I would have every body know) the respect and duty which I owe and pay to you. I have so much inclination to be yours, that I need no other engagement: but the particular ties, by which I am bound to your Lordship and family, have put it out of my power to make you any compliment; since all offers of myself will amount to no more than an honest acknowledgment, and only shew a willingness in me to be grateful.

I am very near wishing that it were not so much my interest to be your Lordship's servant, that it might be more my merit; not that I would avoid being obliged to you, but I would have my own choice to run me into the debt; that I might have it to boast, I had distinguished a man to whom I would be glad to be obliged, even without the hopes of having it in my power ever to make him a return.

It is impossible for me to come near your Lordship in any kind, and not to receive some favour; and while in appearance I am only making an acknowledgment (with the usual under-hand dealing of the world), I am at the same time insinuating my own interest. I cannot give your Lordship your due, without tacking a bill of my own privileges. 'Tis true, if a man never committed a folly, he would never stand in need of a protection: but then power would have nothing to do, and good-nature no occasion to shew itself; and where those qualities are, it is pity they should want objects to shine upon. I must confess this is no reason why a man should do an idle thing, nor indeed any good excuse for it when done: yet it reconciles the uses of such authority and goodness to the necessities of our follies; and is a sort of poetical logick, which at this time I would make use of, to argue your Lordship into a protection of this play. It is the first offence I have committed in this kind, or indeed in any kind of poetry, though not the first made public; and, therefore, I hope will the more easily be pardoned: but had it been acted when it was first written, more might have been said in its behalf; ignorance of the town and stage would then have been excuses in a young writer, which now almost four years experience will scarce allow of. Yet, I must declare myself sensible of the good-nature of the town in receiving this play so kindly, with all its faults, which I must own were, for the most part, very industriously covered by the care of the players; for, for, I think, scarce a character but received all the advantage it would admit of, from the justness of the action.

As for the criticks, my Lord, I have nothing to say to, or against, any of them of any kind; from those who make just exceptions, to those who find fault in the wrong place. I will only make this general answer in behalf of my play (an answer which Epictetus advises every man to make for himself to his censurers), viz. That if they who find some faults in it were as intimate with it as I am, they would find a great many more. This is a confession, which I needed not to have made; but, however, I can draw this use from it, to my own advantage, that I think there are no faults in it but what I do know; which, as I take it, is the first step to an amendment.

Thus I may live in hopes (some time or other) of making the town amends; but you, my Lord, I never can, though I am ever

Your Lordship's

most obedient, and most humble servant,

WILL. CONGREVE.

MR. CONGREVE.

WHEN Virtue in pursuit of Fame appears,
 And forward shoots the growth beyond the years,
 We timely court the rising hero's cause,
 And on his side the poet wisely draws;
 Bespeaking him hereafter—by applause.
 The days will come, when we shall all receive Returning interest from what now we give:
 Instructed, and supported by that praise,
 And reputation, which we strive to raise.
 Nature so coy, so hardly to be woo'd,
 Flies, like a mistress, but to be pursu'd.
 O Congreve! boldly follow on the chace;
 She looks behind, and wants thy strong embrace:
 She yields, she yields! surrenders all her charms,
 Do you but force her gently to your arms:
 Such nerves, such graces, in your lines appear,
 As you were made to be her ravisher.
 Dryden has long extended his command,
 By right divine, quite through the Muses land,
 Absolute lord; and holding now from none,
 But great Apollo, his undoubted crown:
 (That empire settled, and grown old in pow'r)
 Can wish for nothing, but a successor:
 Not to enlarge his limits, but maintain
 Those provinces, which he alone could gain.
 His eldest Wycherly, in wise retreat,
 Thought it not worth his quiet to be great.
 Loose, wand'ring Etherege, in wild pleasures tost,
 And foreign int'rests, to his hopes long lost:
 Poor Lee and Otway dead! Congreve appears,
 The darling, and last comfort of his years:

May'st thou live long in thy great master's smiles,
And, growing under him, adorn these isles:
But when—when part of him (be that but late!)
His body yielding must submit to fate,
Leaving his deathless works and thee behind
(The natural successor of his mind),
Then may'st thou finish what he has begun:
Heir to his merit, be in fame his son.
What thou hast done, shews all is in thy pow'r;
And to write better, only must write more.
'Tis something to be willing to commend;
But my best praise is, that I am your friend.

TO MR. CONG R E V E.

*THE danger's great, in these censorious days,
 When criticks are so rife, to venture praise:
 When the infectious and ill-natur'd brood
 Behold, and damn the work, because 'tis good;
 And, with a proud, ungenerous spirit, try
 To pass an ostracism on poetry.
 But you, my friend, your worth does safely bear
 Above their spleen; you have no cause for fear.
 Like a well-mettled hawk, you took your flight
 Quite out of reach, and almost out of sight.
 As the strong sun, in a fair summer's day,
 You rise, and drive the mists and clouds away,
 The owls and bats, and all the birds of prey.
 Each line of yours, like polish'd steel, 's so hard,
 In beauty safe, it wants no other guard.
 Nature herself's beholden to your dress,
 Which, tho' still like, much fairer you express.
 Some, vainly striving honour to obtain,
 Leave to their heirs the traffick of their brain;
 Like China under ground, the ripening ware,
 In a long time, perhaps, grows worth our care:
 But you now reap the fame, so well you've sown;
 The planter tastes his fruit to ripeness grown.
 As a fair orange-tree at once is seen
 Big with what's ripe, yet springing still with green;
 So, at one time, my worthy friend appears
 With all the sap of youth, and weight of years.
 Accept my pious love, as forward zeal,
 Which, though it ruins me, I can't conceal.
 Expos'd to censure for my weak applause,
 I'm pleas'd to suffer in so just a cause:
 And, though my off'ring may unworthy prove,
 Take, as a friend, the wishes of my love.*

TO MR. CONGREVE,

On his Play, called, The Old Bachelor.

WIT, like true gold, refin'd from all alloy,
 Immortal is, and never can decay.
 'Tis in all times and languages the same;
 Nor can an ill translation quench the flame;
 For, though the form and fashion don't remain,
 Th' intrinsic value still it will retain.
 Then let each studied scene be writ with art;
 And judgment sweat to form the labour'd part:
 Each character be just, and nature seem;
 Without th' ingredient, wit, 'tis all but phlegm;
 For that's the soul which all the mass must move,
 And wake our passions into grief, or love.
 But you, too bounteous, sow your wit so thick,
 We are surpris'd, and know not where to pick;
 And, while with clapping we are just to you,
 Ourselves we injure, and lose something new.
 What mayn't we then, great youth, of thee presage,
 Whose art and wit so much transcend thy age?
 How wilt thou shine at thy meridian height,
 Who, at thy rising, giv'st so vast a light!
 When Dryden, dying, shall the world deceive,
 Whom we immortal, as his works, believe;
 Thou shalt succeed, the glory of the stage,
 Adorn and entertain the coming age.

BEVIL HIGGONS.

PROLOGUE,

P R O L O G U E,

Intended for The Old Bachelor.

Written by LORD FALKLAND.

MOST authors on the stage at first appear,
 Like widows bridegrooms, full of doubt and fear:
 They judge, from the experience of the dame,
 How hard a task it is to quench her flame:
 And who fails short of furnishing a course,
 Up to his brawny predecessor's force,
 With utmost rage from her embraces thrown,
 Remains convicted, as an empty drone.
 Thus often, to his shame, a pert beginner
 Proves, in the end, a miserable sinner.

As for our youngster, I am apt to doubt him,
 With all the vigour of his youth about him.
 But he, more sanguine, trusts in one-and-twenty,
 And impudently hopes he shall content you:
 For, though his bachelor be worn and cold,
 He thinks the young may club to help the old;
 And what alone can be achiev'd by neither
 Is often brought about by both together.
 The briskest of you all have felt alarms,
 Finding the fair-one prostitute her charms,
 With broken sighs, in her old fumbler's arms.
 But, for our spark, he swears he'll ne'er be jealous
 Of any rivals, but young lusty fellows.
 Faith! let him try his chance. And, if the slave,
 After his bragging, prove a washy knave,
 May he be banish'd to some lonely den,
 And never more have leave to dip his pen!
 But, if he be the champion he pretends,
 Both sexes, sure, will join to be his friends;
 For all agree, where all can have their ends.
 And you must own him for a man of might,
 If he holds out to please you the third night.

PROLOGUE,

P R O L O G U E,

Spoken by Mrs. BRACEGIRDLE.

HOW this vile world is chang'd! In former days,
 Prologues were serious speeches before plays;
 Grave, solemn things (as graces are to feasts);
 Where poets begg'd a blessing from their guests.
 But, now, no more like suppliants we come;
 A play makes war, and prologue is the drum.
 Arm'd with keen satire, and with pointed wit,
 We threaten you, who do for judges sit,
 To save our plays; or else we'll damn your pit.
 But, for your comfort, it falls out to-day,
 We've a young author, and his first-born play:
 So, standing only on his good behaviour,
 He's very civil, and entreats your favour.
 Not but the man has malice, would he shew it:
 But, on my conscience! he's a bashful poet;
 You think that strange—no matter, he'll outgrow it.
 Well, I'm his advocate—by me he prays you
 (I don't know whether I shall speak to please you);
 He prays—O bless me! what shall I do now?
 Hang me, if I know what he prays, or how!
 And 'twas the prettiest prologue as he wrote it!
 Well, the deuce take me, if I ha'n't forgot it.
 O Lord! for Heaven's sake! excuse the play;
 Because, you know, if it be damn'd to-day,
 I shall be hang'd, for wanting what to say.
 For my sake then—but I'm in such confusion,
 I cannot stay to hear your resolution.

THE OLD BACHELOR.

ACT I.

SCENE, The Street.

BELLMOUR and VAINLOVE meeting.

Bellm. Vainlove! and abroad so early! Good morrow.
I thought a contemplative lover could no more have parted with his bed in a morning, than he could have slept in't.

Vainl. Bellmour, good morrow—Why truth on't is, these early fallies are not usual to me; but business, as you see, Sir—[showing letters] And business must be followed, or be lost.

Bellm. Business!—And so must time, my friend, be close pursued, or lost. Business is the rub of life, perverts our aim, casts off the bias, and leaves us wide and short of the intended mark.

Vainl. Pleasure, I guess, you mean.

Bellm. Ay, what else has meaning?

Vainl. Oh the wife will tell you—

Bellm. More than they believe—or understand.

Vainl. How, how, Ned! a wise man say more than he understands!

Bellm. Ay, ay, wisdom's nothing but a pretending to know and believe more than we really do. You read of but one wise man; and all that he knew was, that he knew nothing. Come, come, leave business to idlers, and wisdom to fools; they have need of them: wit, be my faculty; and pleasure, my occupation: and let father Time shake his glass. Let low and earthly souls grovel till they have worked themselves six feet deep into a grave. Business is not my element—I roll in a higher orb, and dwell—

2 THE OLD BACHELOR.

Vainl. In castles i'th' air of thy own building: that's thy element, Ned. Well, as high a flyer as you are, I have a lure may make you stoop. [flings a letter.]

Bellm. I, marry, Sir, I have a hawk's eye at a woman's hand—there's more elegancy in the false spelling of this superscription [takes up the letter] than in all Cicero—Let me see—How now! Dear perfidious Vainlove. [reads.]

Vainl. Hold, hold: 'slife! that's the wrong.

Bellm. Nay let's see the name. Sylvia! How canst thou be ungrateful to that creature? She's extremely pretty, and loves thee intirely—I have heard her breathe such raptures about thee—

Vainl. Ay, or any body that she's about—

Bellm. No faith, Frank, you wrong her; she has been just to you.

Vainl. That's pleasant, by my troth, from thee, who hast had her.

Bellm. Never—her affections: 'tis true, by heaven: she own'd it to my face; and (blushing like the virgin morn, when it disclos'd the cheat which that trusty bawd of nature, night, had hid) confess'd her soul was true to you; tho' I by treachery had stolen the bliss—

Vainl. So was true as turtle—in imagination, Ned, ha? Preach this doctrine to husbands, and the married women will adore thee.

Bellm. Why, faith, I think it will do well enough—if the husband be out of the way, for the wife to shew her fondness and impatience of his absence, by choosing a lover as like him as she can; and what is unlike, she may help out with her own fancy.

Vainl. But is it not an abuse to the lover, to be made a blind of?

Bellm. As you say, the abuse is to the lover, not the husband: for 'tis an argument of her great zeal towards him, that she will enjoy him in effigy.

Vainl. It must be a very superstitious country, where such zeal passes for true devotion. I doubt it will be damn'd by all our protestant husbands for flat idolatry—but if you can make Alderman Fondlewife of your persuasion, this letter will be needless.

Bellm. What, the old banker with the handsome wife?

Vainl. Ay.

Bellm. Let me see—Latitia! Oh 'tis a delicious morsel. Dear Frank, thou art the truest friend in the world.

Vainl. Ay, am I not? to be continually starting of hares for you to course. We were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an amour, just where thine takes it up—but read that; it is an appointment for me, this evening; when Fondlewife will be gone out of town, to meet the master of a ship, about the return of a venture which he's in danger of losing. Read, read.

Bellm. reads. Hum, hum—Out of town this evening, and talks of sending for Mr. Spintext to keep me company; but I'll take care he shall not be at home. Good! Spintext! Oh the fanatic one-eyed parson!

Vainl. Ay.

Bellm. reads. Hum, hum—That your conversation will be much more agreeable if you can counterfeit his habit, to blind the servants. Very good! then I must be disguised—with all my heart—it adds a gusto to an amour; gives it the greater resemblance of theft; and among us lewd mortals, the deeper the sin the sweeter. Frank, I'm amazed at thy good-nature—

Vainl. Faith, I hate love when 'tis forced upon a man, as I do wine—And this business is none of my seeking; I only happened to be once or twice, where Latitia was the handsomest woman in company, so consequently applied myself to her—and it seems she has taken me at my word—Had you been there, or any body, it had been the same.

Bellm. O with I may succeed as the same.

Vainl. Never doubt it; for if the spirit of cuckoldom be once raised up in a woman, the devil can't lay it, till she has don't.

Bellm. Pristee, what sort of fellow is Fondlewife?

Vainl.

Vainl.

Vainl. A kind of mongrel zealot, sometimes very precise and peevish; but I have seen him pleasant enough in his way: much addicted to jealousy, but more to fondness: so that, as he is often jealous without a cause, he's as often satisfied without reason.

Bellm. A very even temper, and fit for my purpose. I must get your man Setter to provide my disguise.

Vainl. Ay, you may take him for good and all if you will, for you have made him fit for nobody else—Well—

Bellm. You're going to visit in return of Sylvia's letter—Poor rogue! any hour of the day or night will serve her—But do you know nothing of a new rival there?

Vainl. Yes, Heartwell, that surly, old, pretended woman-hater, thinks her virtuous; that's one reason why I fail her: I would have her fret herself out of conceit with me, that she may entertain some thoughts of him. I know he visits her every day.

Bellm. Yet rails on still, and thinks his love unknown to us; a little time will swell him so, he must be forced to give it birth; and the discovery must needs be very pleasant from himself; to see what pains he will take, and how he will strain to be delivered of a secret, when he has miscarried of it already.

Vainl. Well, good morrow, let's dine together; I'll meet at the old place.

Bellm. With all my heart; it lies convenient for us to pay our afternoon services to our mistresses. I find I am damnably in love, I'm so uneasy for not having seen Belinda yesterday.

Vainl. But I saw my Araminta, yet am as impatient.

Bellm. Why what a cormorant in love am I! who, not contented with the slavery of honourable love in one place, and the pleasure of enjoying some half a score mistresses of my own acquiring; must yet take Vainlove's business upon my hands, because it lay too heavy upon his; so am not only forced to lie with other men's wives for them, but must also undertake the harder task of obliging their mistresses!—I must take up, or I shall never hold out; flesh and blood cannot bear it always.

Enter

Enter Sharper.

Sharp. I'm sorry to see this, Ned: once a man comes to his soliloquies, I give him for gone.

Bellm. Sharper, I'm glad to see thee.

Sharp. What, is Belinda cruel, that you are so thoughtful?

Bellm. No faith, not for that—But there's a business of consequence fallen out to day, that requires some consideration.

Sharp. Prithee what mighty-business of consequence canst thou have?

Bellm. Why you must know, 'tis a piece of work toward the finishing of an alderman; it seems I must put the last hand to it, and dub him cuckold, that he may be of equal dignity with the rest of his brethren: so I must beg Belinda's pardon.—

Sharp. Faith e'en give her over for good-and-all: you can have no hopes of getting her for a mistress; and she is too proud, too inconstant, too affected, too witty, and too handsome for a wife.

Bellm. But she can't have too much money—there's twelve thousand pounds, Tom.—'Tis true she is exceedingly foppish and affected, but in my conscience I believe the baggage loves me; for she never speaks well of me herself, nor suffers any body else to rail at me. Then, as I told you, there's twelve thousand pounds—hum—Why faith, upon second thoughts, she does not appear to be so very affected neither—Give her her due, I think the woman's a woman, and that's all. As such, I'm sure I shall like her; for the devil take me if I don't love all the sex.

Sharp. And here comes one who swears as heartily he hates all the sex.

Enter Heartwell.

Bellm. Who, Heartwell! ay, but he knows better things.—How now, George, where hast thou been, snarling odious truths, and entertaining company, like a physician, with discourse of their diseases and infirmities? What fine lady hast thou been putting out of conceit with herself, and persuading that the face she had been making all the morning was none of her own? for

I know thou art as unmannerly and as unwelcome to a woman, as a looking-glass after the small-pox.

Heart. I confess I have not been sneering fulsome lies and nauseous flattery, fawning upon a little tawdry whore, that will fawn upon me again, and entertain any puppy that comes, like a tumbler, with the same tricks over and over. For such, I guess, may have been your late employment.

Bellm. Would thou hadst come a little sooner! Vain-love would have wrought thy conversion, and been a champion for the cause.

Heart. What, has he been here? that's one of love's April-fools, is always upon some errand that's to no purpose, ever embarking in adventures, yet never comes to harbour.

Sharp. That's because he always sets out in foul weather, loves to buffet with the winds, meet the tide, and sail in the teeth of opposition.

Heart. What, has he not dropt anchor at Araminta?

Bellm. Truth on't is, she fits his temper best, is a kind of a floating island; sometimes seems in reach, then vanishes, and keeps him busied in the search.

Sharp. She had need have a good share of sense, to manage so capricious a lover.

Bellm. Faith, I don't know. He's of a temper the most easy to himself in the world; he takes as much always of an amour, as he cares for, and quits it when it grows stale and unpleasant.

Sharp. An argument of very little passion, very good understanding, and very ill nature.

Heart. And proves that Vainlove plays the fool with discretion.

Sharp. You, Bellmour, are bound in gratitude to stickle for him; you with pleasure reap that fruit, which he takes pains to sow; he does the drudgery in the mine, and you stamp your image on the gold.

Bellm. He's of another opinion, and says I do the drudgery in the mine. Well, we have each our share of sport, and each that which he likes best; 'tis his diversion to set, 'tis mine to cover the partridge.

Heart. And it should be mine to let them go again.

Sharp.

Sharp. Not till you had mouth'd a little, George; I think that's all thou art fit for now.

Heart. Good Mr. Young-fellow, you're mistaken. As able as yourself, and as nimble too, though I mayn't have so much mercury in my limbs. 'Tis true, indeed, I don't force appetite, but wait the natural call of my lust; and think it time enough to be lewd, after I have had the temptation.

Bellm. Time enough: ay, too soon, I should rather have expected from a person of your gravity.

Heart. Yet it is oftentimes too late with some of you young, termagant, flashy sinners—you have all the guilt of the intention, and none of the pleasure of the practice.—'Tis true, you are so eager in pursuit of the temptation, that you save the devil the trouble of leading you into it. Nor is it out of discretion, that you don't swallow that very hook yourselves have baited: but you are cloyed with the preparative; and what you mean for a whet, turns the edge of your puny stomachs. Your love is like your courage, which you shew, for the first year or two, upon all occasions, till in a little time, being disabled or disarmed, you abate of your vigour; and that daring blade, which was so often drawn, is bound to the peace for ever after.

Bellm. Thou art an old fornicator of a singular good principle, indeed! and art for encouraging youth, that they may be as wicked as thou art at thy years.

Heart. I am for having every body be what they pretend to be; a whoremaster be a whoremaster; and not, like Vainlove, kiss a lap-dog with passion, when it would disgust him from the lady's own lips.

Bellm. That only happens sometimes, where the dog has the sweeter breath, for the more cleanly conveyance. But, George, you must not quarrel with little gallantries of this nature; women are often won by them. Who would refuse to kiss a lap-dog, if it were preliminary to the lips of his lady?

Sharp. Or omit playing with her fan, and cooling her if she were hot, when it might entitle him to the office of warming her when she should be cold?

Bellm. What is it to read a play in a rainy day, though you should be now and then interrupted in a witty scene, and she perhaps preserve her laughter till the jest were over? Even that may be borne with, considering the reward in prospect.

Heart. I confess, you that are women's asses bear greater burdens; are forced to undergo dressing, dancing, fingering, fighting, whining, rhyming, flattering, lying, grinning, cringing, and the drudgery of loving to boot.

Bellm. O brute! the drudgery of loving!

Heart. Ay. Why, to come to love through all these incumbrances is like coming to an estate overcharged with debts, which, by the time you have paid, yields no further profit than what the bare tillage and manuring of the land will produce at the expence of your own sweat.

Bellm. Prithee, how dost thou love?

Sharp. He! he hates the sex.

Heart. So I hate phyfic too—yet I may love to take it for my health.

Bellm. Well come off, George, if at any time you should be taken straying.

Sharp. He has need of such an excuse, considering the present state of his body.

Heart. How d'ye mean?

Sharp. Why, if whoring be purging (as you call it), then, I may say, marriage is entering into a course of phyfic.

Bellm. How! George: does the wind blow there?

Heart. It will as soon blow North and by South—Marry, quotha! I hope in heaven I have a greater portion of grace; and I think I have baited too many of those traps, to be caught in one myself.

Bellm. Who the devil would have thee, unless 'twere an oyster-woman, to propagate young fry for Billingsgate?—Thy talent will never recommend thee to any thing of better quality.

Heart. My talent is chiefly that of speaking truth; which I don't expect should ever recommend me to people of quality. I thank heaven, I have very honestly purchased the hatred of all the great families in town.

Sharp.

THE OLD BACHELOR.

Sharp. And you, in return of spleen, hate them. But, could you hope to be received into the alliance of a noble family—

Heart. No, I hope I shall never merit that affliction to be punished with a wife of birth—be a stag of the first head, and bear my horns aloft, like one of the supporters of my wife's coat. 'Sdeath! I would not be a cuckold to ever an illustrious whore in England.

Bellm. What, not to make your family, man! and provide for your children!

Sharp. For her children, you mean,

Heart. Ay, there you have nickt it—there's the devil upon devil—O the pride and joy of heart 'twould be to me, to have my son and heir resemble such a duke—to have a steering coxcomb scoff and cry, Mr. your son's mighty like his grace, has just his smile and air of's face. Then replies another—methinks he has more of the marquis of such a place about his nose and eyes; though he has my lord what-d'ye-call's mouth to a tittle. Then I, to put it off as unconcerned, come chuck the infant under the chin, force a smile, and cry, ay, the boy takes after his mother's relations—when the devil and she know, 'tis a little compound of the whole body of nobility.

Bell. and Sharp. Ha, ha, ha.

Bell. Well! out, George, I have one question to ask you—

Heart. Pshaw! I have prattled away my time—I hope you are in no haste for an answer—for I shan't stay now. [looking on his watch.

Bellm. Nay, prithee, George—

Heart. No; besides my business, I see a fool coming this way. Adieu. [Exit.

Bellm. What does he mean? O! 'tis Sir Joseph Wittoll, with his friend; but I see he has turned the corner, and goes another way.

Sharp. What in the name of wonder is it?

Bellm. Why, a fool.

Sharp. 'Tis a tawdry outside.

Bellm. And a very beggarly lining—yet he may be worth worth your acquaintance—a little of thy chemistry, Tom, may extract gold from that dirt.

Sharp. Say you so? faith! I am as poor as a chemist, and would be as industrious. But what was he that followed him? Is not he a dragon, that watches those golden-pippins?

Bellm. Hang him, no; he a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can ensure his anger dormant; or, should he seem to rouse, 'tis but well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top.

Sharp. Ay! is he of that kidney?

Bellm. Yet is adored by that bigot Sir Joseph Wittoll, as the image of valour. He calls him his Back; and, indeed, they are never asunder—yet last night, I know not by what mischance, the knight was alone, and had fallen into the hands of some night-walkers, who, I suppose, would have pillaged him; but I chanced to come by, and rescued him; though I believe he was heartily frightened, for, as soon as ever he was loose, he ran away, without staying to see who had helped him.

Sharp. Is that bully of his in the army?

Bellm. No; but is a pretender, and wears the habit of a soldier, which now-a-days as often cloaks cowardice, as a black gown does atheism.—You must know, he has been abroad—went purely to run away from a campaign; enriched himself with the plunder of a few oaths—and here vents them against the general, who, fighting men of merit, and preferring only those of interest, has made him quit the service.

Sharp. Wherein, no doubt, he magnifies his own performance.

Bellm. Speaks miracles! is the drum to his own praise—the only implement of a soldier he resembles; like that, being full of blustering noise and emptiness—

Sharp. And, like that, of no use but to be beaten.

Bellm. Right; but then the comparison breaks, for he will take a drubbing with as little noise as a pulpit-cushion.

Sharp. His name; and I have done.

Bellm. Why that, to pass it current too, he has gilded with a title. He is called Captain Bluffe.

Sharp.

THE OLD BACHELOR.

11

Sharp. Well, I'll endeavour his acquaintance—you steer another course, are bound

For love's fair isle; I for the golden coast:

May each succeed in what he wishes most! [Exeunt.]

A C T II.

Enter Sir Joseph Wittoll, Sharper following.

Sharp. SURE that's he, and alone.

Sir J. Witt. Um—ay, this is the very damn'd place; the inhuman cannibals, the bloody-minded villains, would have butcher'd me last night: no doubt, they would have flea'd me alive, have sold my skin, and devoured, &c.

Sharp. How's this!

Sir J. Witt. An it hadn't been for a civil gentleman as came by and frighted them away—but egad I durst not stay to give him thanks.

Sharp. This must be Bellmour he means—Ha! I have a thought—

Sir J. Witt. Zooks, would the captain would come! the very remembrance makes me quake; egad I shall never be reconciled to this place heartily.

Sharp. 'Tis but trying, and being where I am at worst. Now luck!—curst fortune! this must be the place, this damn'd unlucky place—

Sir J. Witt. Egad and so 'tis—why here has been more mischief done, I perceive.

Sharp. No, 'tis gone, it is lost—ten thousand devils on that chance which drew me hither; ay here, just here, this spot to me is hell; nothing to be found, but the despair of what I've lost. [looking about as in search]

Sir J. Witt. Poor gentleman!—By the Lord Harry, I'll stay no longer, for I have found too—

Sharp. Ha! who's that has found? what have you found? restore it quickly, or by—

Sir J. Witt. Not I, sir, not I; as I've a soul to be saved, I have found nothing but what has been to my loss, as I may say, and as you were saying, sir.

Sharp. O your servant, sir: you are safe then, it seems; seems; 'tis an ill wind that blows nobody good: well, you may rejoice over my ill fortune, since it paid the price of your ransom.

Sir J. Witt. I rejoice! egad not I, sir: I'm very sorry for your loss, with all my heart, blood and guts, sir: and if you did but know me, you'd ne'er say I were so ill-natured.

Sharp. Know you! why, can you be so ungrateful, to forget me!

Sir J. Witt. O Lord! forget him! No, no, sir, I don't forget you—because I never saw your face before, egad. Ha, ha, ha!

Sharp. How!

[angrily.]

Sir J. Witt. Stay, stay, sir, let me recollect.—He's a damn'd angry fellow!—I believe I had better remember him, till I can get out of his sight; but out o' sight out o' mind, egad.

[aside.]

Sharp. Methought the service I did you last night, sir, in preserving you from those ruffians, might have taken better root in your shallow memory.

Sir J. Witt. Gad's-daggers! belts, blades, and scabbards! this is the very gentleman! How shall I make him a return suitable to the greatness of his merit?—I had a pretty thing to that purpose, if he han't frightened it out of my memory. Hem! hem! sir, I most submissively implore your pardon for my transgression of ingratitude and omission; having my intire dependance, sir, upon the superfluity of your goodness, which, like an inundation, will, I hope, totally immerge the recollection of my error, and leave me floating in your sight, upon the full-blown bladders of repentance—by the help of which, I shall once more hope to swim into your favour.

[bows.]

Sharp. So-h, O, sir, I am easily pacified—the acknowledgment of a gentleman—

Sir J. Witt. Acknowledgment, sir! I am all over acknowledgment, and will not stick to shew it in the greatest extremity, by night or by day, in sickness or in health, winter or summer; all seasons and occasions shall testify the reality and gratitude of your super-abundant humble servant, Sir Joleph Wittoll, Knight. Hem! hem!

Sharp.

Sharp. Sir Joseph Wittoll?

Sir J. Witt. The same, sir, of Wittoll Hall, in Comitatu Bucks.

Sharp. Is it possible? Then I am happy, to have obliged the mirror of knighthood and pink of courtesy in the age—let me embrace you.

Sir J. Witt. O Lord, sir.

Sharp. My loss I esteem as a trifle repaid with interest, since it has purchased me the friendship and acquaintance of the person in the world whose character I admire.

Sir J. Witt. You are only pleased to say so.—But pray, if I may be so bold, what is that loss you mention?

Sharp. O term it no longer so, sir. In the scuffle, last night, I only dropt a bill of a hundred pounds, which, I confess, I came half despairing to recover; but thanks to my better fortune—

Sir J. Witt. You have found it, sir, then it seems; I profess I'm heartily glad—

Sharp. Sir, your humble servant—I don't question but you are; that you have so cheap an opportunity of expressing your gratitude and generosity; since the paying so trivial a sum will wholly acquit you, and doubly engage me.

Sir J. Witt. What a dickens does he mean by a trivial sum? [aside].—But han't you found it, sir?

Sharp. No otherwise, I vow to Gad, but in my hopes in you, sir.

Sir J. Witt. Humph.

Sharp. But that's sufficient—'twere injustice to doubt the honour of Sir Joseph Wittoll.

Sir J. Witt. O Lord, sir.

Sharp. You are above (I'm sure) a thought so low, to suffer me to lose what was ventured in your service; nay, 'twas in a manner—paid down for your deliverance, 'twas so much lent you—and you scorn, I'll say that for you—

Sir J. Witt. Nay I'll say that for myself (with your leave, sir,) I do scorn a dirty thing. But egad I'm a little out of pocket at present.

Sharp. Pshaw! you can't want a hundred pounds. Your word word is sufficient any where: 'tis but borrowing so much dirt; you have large acres, and can soon repay it—Money is but dirt, Sir Joseph—mere dirt.

Sir J. Will. But, I profess, 'tis a dirt I have washed my hands of at present; I have laid it all out upon my Back.

Sharp. Are you so extravagant in clothes, Sir Joseph?

Sir J. Will. Ha, ha, ha, a very good jest, I profess; ha, ha, ha, a very good jest, and I did not know that I had said it, and that's a better jest than t'other. 'Tis a sign you and I han't been long acquainted; you have lost a good jest, for want of knowing me.—I only mean a friend of mine, whom I call my Back; he sticks as close to me, and follows me through all dangers—he is indeed back, breast, and headpiece as it were to me—egad he's a brave fellow—pah! I'm quite another thing, when I am with him: I don't fear the devil (bless us) almost if he be by. Ah—had he been with me last night—

Sharp. If he had, Sir, what then? he could have done no more, nor perhaps have suffered so much—Had he a hundred pounds to lose? [angrily.]

Sir J. Will. O Lord, sir, by no means (but I might have saved a hundred pounds). I meant innocently, as I hope to be saved, sir (a damn'd hot fellow!) only, as I was saying, I let him have all my ready money, to redeem his great sword from limbo.—But, sir, I have a letter of credit to Alderman Fondlewife, as far as two hundred pounds; and this afternoon you shall see I am a person, such a one as you would wish to have met with—

Sharp. That you are I'll be sworn. [aside.] Why that's great, and like yourself.

Enter Captain Bluffe.

Sir J. Will. O here a'comes—Ay, my Hector of Troy, welcome my bully, my back; egad my heart has gone apit pat for thee.

Bluffe. How now, my young knight? not for fear, I hope? He that knows me must be a stranger to fear.

Sir J. Will. Nay, egad I hate fear, ever since I had like to have died of a fright—but—

Bluffe.

Bluffe. But ? look you here, boy, here's your antidote, here's your Jesuits powder for a shaking fit—But who hast thou got with thee ? is he of mettle ?

[laying his hand upon his sword.]

Sir J. Witt. Ay, bully, a devilish smart fellow : 'a will fight like a cock.

Bluffe. Say you so ? then I honour him—but has he been abroad ? for every cock will fight upon his own dunghill.

Sir J. Witt. I don't know, but I'll present you—

Bluffe. I'll recommend myself.—Sir, I honour you ; I understand you love fighting, I reverence a man that loves fighting : fir, I kiss your hilts.

Sharp. Sir, your servant : but you are misinformed ; for unless it be to serve my particular friend, as Sir Joseph here, my country, or my religion, or in some very justifiable cause, I'm not for it.

Bluffe. O Lord, I beg your pardon, fir ; I find you are not of my palate, you can't relish a dish of fighting without sweet sauce. Now I think—

Fighting, for fighting sake's sufficient cause ;

Fighting, to me's religion and the laws.

Sir J. Witt. Ah, well said, my hero ; was not that great, fir ? By the Lord Harry, he says true ; fighting is meat, drink and cloth to him. But, Back, this gentleman is one of the best friends I have in the world, and saved my life last night—you know I told you.

Bluffe. Ay ! then I honour him again.—Sir, may I crave your name ?

Sharp. Ay, fir, my name's Sharper.

Sir J. Witt. Pray, Mr. Sharper, embrace my back—very well—By the Lord Harry, Mr. Sharper, he's as brave a fellow as Cannibal ; are not you—bully-back ?

Sharp. Hannibal I believe you mean, Sir Joseph.

Bluffe. Undoubtedly he did, fir ; faith, Hannibal was a very pretty fellow—but, Sir Joseph, comparisons are odious—Hannibal was a very pretty fellow in those days, it must be granted—but alas, fir ! were he alive now, he would be nothing, nothing in the earth.

Sharp. How, fir ! I make a doubt, if there be at this day a greater general breathing.

Bluffe. Oh, excuse me, fir; have you served abroad, fir?

Sharp. Not I really, fir.

Bluffe. Oh, I thought so—why then you can know nothing, fir: I am afraid you scarce know the history of the late war in Flanders, with all its particulars.

Sharp. Not I, fir, no more than public letters, or gazettes, tell us.

Bluffe. Gazettes! why there again now—why, fir, there are not three words of truth the year round, put into the gazette.—I'll tell you a strange thing now as to that—you must know, fir, I was resident in Flanders the last campaign, had a small post there; but no matter for that—Perhaps, fir, there was scarce any thing of moment done but an humble servant of yours, that shall be nameless, was an eye-witness of—I won't say had the greatest share in't. Tho' I might say that too, since I name nobody, you know—Well, Mr. Sharper, would you think it? In all this time—as I hope for a truncheon—this rascally gazette-writer never so much as once mentioned me—not once, by the wars—took no more notice, than as if Nol. Bluffe had not been in the land of the living.

Sharp. Strange!

Sir J. Witt. Yet, by the Lord Harry, 'tis true, Mr. Sharper; for I went every day to coffee-houses, to read the gazette myself.

Bluffe. Ay, ay, no matter—you see, Mr. Sharper, after all, I am content to retire—live a private person—Scipio and others have done it.

Sharp. Impudent rogue!

[aside.]

Sir J. Witt. Ay, this damn'd modesty of yours—Egad, if he would put in for't, he might be made general himself yet.

Bluffe. O fie, no, Sir Joseph—you know I hate this.

Sir J. Witt. Let me but tell Mr. Sharper a little, how you ate fire once out of the mouth of a cannon—egad he did; those impenetrable whiskers of his have confronted flames—

Bluffe. Death, what do you mean, Sir Joseph?

Sir

Sir J. Witt. Look you know, I tell you he's so modest, he'll own nothing.

Bluffe. Pish, you have put me out, I have forgot what I was about. Pray hold your tongue, and give me leave. [angrily.]

Sir J. Witt. I am dumb.

Bluffe. This sword I think I was telling you of, Mr. Sharper—this sword I'll maintain to be the best divine, anatomist, lawyer, or casuist, in Europe; it shall decide a controversy, or split a cause—

Sir J. Witt. Nay, now I must speak; it will split a hair, by the Lord Harry, I have seen it.

Bluffe. Zounds, sir, 'tis a lie, you have not seen it, nor shan't see it; sir, I say, you can't see; what d'ye say to that now?

Sir J. Witt. I am blind.

Bluffe. Death, had any other man interrupted me—

Sir J. Witt. Good Mr. Sharper, speak to him; I dare not look that way.

Sharp. Captain, Sir Joseph is penitent.

Bluffe. O I am calm, sir, calm as a discharged culverin—but 'twas indiscreet when you know what will provoke me—nay come, Sir Joseph, you know my heat's soon over.

Sir J. Witt. Well, I am a fool sometimes—but I'm sorry.

Bluffe. Enough.

Sir J. Witt. Come, we'll go take a glass, to drown animosities—Mr. Sharper, will you partake?

Sharp. I wait on you sir; nay pray, captain—you are Sir Joseph's back. [Exeunt.]

SCENE, Araminta's Apartment. Enter Araminta and Belinda.

Bel. Ah! nay, dear—prithee good, dear, sweet cousin, no more—O Gad! I swear you'd make one sick to hear you.

Aram. Bless me! what have I said, to move you thus?

Bel. Oh, you have raved, talked idly, and all in commendation of that filthy, awkward, two-legg'd creature, man—you don't know what you've said, your fever has transported you.

Aram.

Aram. If love be the fever which you mean, kind heaven avert the cure! let me have oil to feed that flame, and never let it be extinct, till I myself am ashes.

Bel. There was a whine!—O Gad! I hate your horrid fancy——this love is the devil, and sure to be in love is to be possess'd——'tis in the head, the heart, the blood, the—all over—O Gad! you are quite spoiled——I shall loath the sight of mankind for your sake.

Aram. Fie, this is gross affectation—a little of Bellmour's company would change the scene.

Bel. Filthy fellow! I wonder, cousin—

Aram. I wonder, cousin, you should imagine I don't perceive you love him.

Bel. Oh! I love your hideous fancy! ha, ha, ha, love a man!

Aram. Love a man! yes, you would not love a beast.

Bel. Of all beasts not an ass— which is so like your Vainlove——Lard! I have seen an ass look so chagrin, ha, ha, ha, (you must pardon me, I can't help laughing) that an absolute lover would have concluded the poor creature to have had darts, and flames, and altars, and all that in his breast. Araminta, come, I'll talk seriously to you now; could you but see with my eyes, the buffoonery of one scene of address, a lover, set out with all his equipage and appurtenances; O Gad! sure you would—but you play the game, and consequently can't see the miscarriages obvious to every stander-by.

Aram. Yes, yes, I can see something near it, when you and Bellmour meet. You don't know that you dreamt of Bellmour last night, and called him aloud in your sleep.

Bel. Pish, I can't help dreaming of the devil sometimes; would you from thence infer I love him?

Aram. But that's not all; you caught me in your arms when you named him, and press'd me to your bosom—sure, if I had not pinch'd you till you waked, you had stifled me with kisses.

Bel. O barbarous aspersions!

Aram. No aspersions, cousin, we are alone——Nay I can tell you more.

Bel.

Bel. I deny it all.

Aram. What, before you hear it?

Bel. My denial is premeditated, like your malice—

Lard, cousin, you talk oddly—whatever the matter is, by my soul, I'm afraid you'll follow evil courses.

Aram. Ha, ha, ha, this is pleasant.

Bel. You may laugh, but—

Aram. Ha, ha, ha.

Bel. You may think the malicious grin becomes you—The devil take Bellmour!—why do you tell me of him?

Aram. Oh! is it come out?—Now you are angry, I am sure you love him. I tell nobody else, cousin—I have not betrayed you yet.

Bel. Prithce tell it all the world, 'tis false.

Aram. Come then, kiss, and friends.

Bell. Pish.

Aram. Prithce don't be so peevish.

Bel. Prithce don't be so impertinent,—Betty.

Aram. Ha, ha, ha.

Enter Betty.

Betty. Did your ladyship call, madam?

Bel. Get my hoods and tippet, and bid the footman call a chair. [Exit Betty.]

Aram. I hope you are not going out in dudgeon, cousin.

Enter Footman.

Footm. Madam, there are—

Bel. Is there a chair?

Footm. No, madam, there are Mr. Bellmour and Mr. Vainlove, to wait upon your ladyship.

Aram. Are they below?

Footm. No, madam; they sent before, to know if you were at home.

Bel. The visit's to you, cousin: I suppose I am at my liberty.

Aram. Be ready to shew them up. [Exit Footman.]

Enter Betty, with hoods and looking-glass.

I can't tell, cousin, I believe we are equally concerned: but if you continue your humour, it won't be very very entertaining.—I know she'd fain be persuaded to stay. [aside.]

Bel. I shall oblige you, in leaving you to the full and free enjoyment of that conversation you admire—Let me see; hold, I look wretchedly to-day!

Aram. Betty, why don't you help my cousin!

[putting on her hoods.]

Bel. Hold off your fists, and see that he gets a chair with a high roof, or a very low seat—Stay, come back here, you Mrs. Fidget—you are so ready to go to the footman—here, take them all again, my mind's changed, I won't go.

[Exit Betty.]

Aram. So, this I expected—you won't oblige me then, cousin, and let me have all the company to myself?

Bel. No, upon deliberation, I have too much charity to trust you to yourself. The devil watches all opportunities; and in this favourable disposition of your mind, Heaven knows how far you may be tempted: I am tender of your reputation.

Aram. I am obliged to you—but who's malicious now, Belinda?

Bel. Not I; witness my heart, I stay out of pure affection.

Aram. In my conscience I believe you.

Enter Vainlove and Bellmour.

Bellm. So, fortune be praised! to find you both within, ladies, is—

Aram. No miracle, I hope.

Bellm. Not on your side, madam, I confess—but my tyrant there and I are two buckets, that can never come together.

Bel. Nor are ever like—yet we often meet and clash.

Bellm. How, never like! marry, Hymen forbid. But this it is to run so extravagantly in debt; I have laid out such a world of love in your service, that you think you can never be able to pay me all: so shun me for the same reason that you would a dun.

Bel. Ay, on my conscience, and the most impertinent and troublesome of duns—a dun for money will be quiet, when he sees his debtor has not wherewithal—

but

THE OLD BACHELOR.

but a dun for love is an eternal torment, that never rests—

Bellm. Till he has created love where there was none, and then gets it for his pains. For importunity in love, like importunity at court, first creates its own interest, and then pursues it for the favour.

Aram. Favours that are got by impudence and importunity are like discoveries from the rack, when the afflicted person, for his ease, sometimes confesses secrets his heart knows nothing of.

Vaint. I should rather think favours so gained to be due rewards to indefatigable devotion—for as Love is a deity, he must be served by prayer.

Bel. O Gad! would you would all pray to Love then, and let us alone!

Vainl. You are the temples of Love, and 'tis through you our devotion must be conveyed.

Aram. Rather, poor silly idols of your own making, which upon the least displeasure you forsake, and set up new.—Every man now changes his mistress and his religion, as his humour varies, or his interest.

Vainl. O madam—

Aram. Nay come, I find we are growing serious, and then we are in great danger of being dull—If my music-master is not gone, I'll entertain you with a new song, which comes pretty near my own opinion of love and your sex—Who's there? Is Mr. Gavot gone? [calls.

Enter Footman.

Footm. Only to the next door, madam; I'll call him.

Bellm. Why, you won't hear me with patience.

Aram. What's the matter, cousin?

Bellm. Nothing, madam, only—

Bel. Prithee hold thy tongue—Lard! he has so pestered me with flames and stuff—I think I shan't endure the sight of a fire this twelvemonth.

Bellm. Yet all can't melt that cruel frozen heart.

Bel. O Gad! I hate your hideous fancy—you said that once before—If you must talk impertinently, for heaven's sake, let it be with variety; don't come always, ways, like the devil, wrapt in flames—I'll not hear a sentence more, that begins with an, I burn—or an, I beseech you, madam.

Bellm. But tell me how you would be adored—I am very tractable.

Bel. Then know, I would be adored in silence.

Bellm. Humph, I thought so, that you might have all the talk to yourself—You had better let me speak; for, if my thoughts fly to any pitch, I shall make villainous signs.

Bel. What will you get by that; to make such signs as I won't understand?

Bellm. Ay, but if I'm tongue-tied, I must have all my actions free to—quicken your apprehension—and egad let me tell you, my most prevailing argument is expressed in dumb shew.

Enter Music-Master.

Aram. O I am glad we shall have a song, to divert the discourse—Pray oblige us with the last new song.

S O N G.

*Thus to a ripe, consenting maid,
Poor old, repenting Delia said,
Would you long preserve your lover?
Would you still his goddess reign?
Never let him all discover,
Never let him much obtain.*

*Men will admire, adore, and die,
While wishing at your feet they lie:
But admitting their embraces,
Wakes them from the golden dream;
Nothing's new besides our faces,
Every woman is the same.*

Aram. So, how d'ye like the song, gentlemen?

Bellm. O very well perform'd—but I don't much admire the words.

Aram. I expected it—there's too much truth in them. If Mr. Gayot will walk with us in the garden, we'll have it once again—you may like it better at second hearing. You'll bring my cousin, Bellm.

Bellm. Faith, madam, I dare not speak to her, but I'll make signs. [addresses Belinda in dumb show.]

Bel. O foh, your dumb rhetoric is more ridiculous than your talking impertinence; as an ape is a much more troublesome animal than a parrot.

Aram. Ay, cousin, and 'tis a sign the creatures mimic nature well; for there are few men, but do more filly things than they say.

Bellm. Well, I find my apishness has paid the ransom for my speech, and set it at liberty—tho' I confess, I could be well enough pleased to drive on a love bargain in that silent manner—'twould save a man a world of lying and swearing at the year's end. Besides, I have had a little experience, that brings to mind—

*When wit and reason both have fail'd to move;
Kind looks and actions (from success) do prove,
Ev'n silence may be eloquent in love.* [Exeunt.]

End of the second Act.

ACT III. Scene, The Street.

Silvia and Lucy.

Silv. WILL he not come then?

Lucy. Yes, yes, come, I warrant him, if you will go in and be ready to receive him.

Silv. Why did you not tell me?—Whom mean you?

Lucy. Whom you should mean, Heartwell.

Silv. Senseless creature, I meant my Vanlove.

Lucy. You may as soon hope to recover your own maidenhead, as his love. Therefore e'en let your heart at rest; and, in the name of opportunity, mind your own business. Strike Heartwell home, before the bait's worn off the hook. Age will come. He nibbled fairly yesterday, and no doubt will be eager enough to-day to swallow the temptation.

Silv. Well, since there's no remedy—yet tell me—for I would know, though to the anguish of my soul, how did he refuse? tell me—how did he receive my letter, in anger or in scorn?

Lucy.

Lucy. Neither; but what was ten times worse, with damn'd, senseless indifference. By this light I could have spit in his face—Receive it! why he received it, as I would one of your lovers that should come empty-handed; as a court lord does his mercer's bill, or a begging dedication—he received it, as if't had been a letter from his wife.

Silv. What, did he not read it?

Lucy. Humm'd it over, gave you his respects, and said, he would take time to peruse it—but then he was in haste.

Silv. Respects, and peruse it! he's gone, and Araminta has bewitch'd him from me—Oh how the name of rival fires my blood!—I could curse them both; eternal jealousy attend her love, and disappointment meet his. Oh that I could revenge the torment he has caused—methinks I feel the woman strong within me, and vengeance kindles in the room of love.

Lucy. I have that in my head may make mischief.

Silv. How, dear Lucy?

Lucy. You know Araminta's dissembled coyness has won, and keeps him hers—

Silv. Could we persuade him, that she loves another—

Lucy. No, you're out; could we persuade him that she dotes on him, himself—contrive a kind letter as from her: 'twould disgust his nicety and take away his stomach.

Silv. Impossible, 'twill never take!

Lucy. Trouble not your head. Let me alone—I will inform myself of what past between 'em to day, and about it straight—Hold, I'm mistaken, or that's Heartwell, who stands talking at the corner—'tis he—go get you in, madam, receive him pleasantly, dress up your face in innocence and smiles, and dissemble the very want of dissimulation—you know what will take him.

Silv. 'Tis as hard to counterfeit love, as it is to conceal it: but I'll do my weak endeavour, though I fear I have not art.

Lucy. Hang art, madam, and trust to nature for dissembling.

Man was by nature woman's cully made:

We never are but by ourselves betray'd.

Heartwell,

Enter Heartwell, Vainlove and Bellmour following.

Bellm. Hift, hift, is not that Heartwell going to Silvia?

Vain. He's talking to himself, I think: prithee let's try if we can hear him.

Heart. Why, whither in the devil's name am I going now? Hum——let me think——is not this Silvia's house, the cave of that enchantress, and which consequently I ought to shun as I would infection? To enter here, is to put on the envenom'd shirt, to run into the embraces of a fever, and in some raving fit be led to plunge myself into that more consuming fire, a woman's arms. Ha! well recollected, I will recover my reason, and be gone.

Bellm. Now Venus forbid!

Vain. Hush——

Heart. Well, why do you not move? Feet, do your office—Not one inch; no, 'fore Gad I'm caught—There stands my north, and thither my needle points—Now could I curse myself, yet cannot repent. O thou delicious, damn'd, dear, destructive woman! 'Sdeath, how the young fellows will hoot me! I shall be the jest of the town. Nay, in two days I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woful ballad, to the tune of "The Superannuated Maiden's Comfort, or the Bachelor's Fall;" and upon the third, I shall be hang'd in effigy, pasted up for the exemplary ornament of necessary houses and cobblers stalls—Death, I can't think on't—I'll run into the danger to lose the apprehension. [Exit.

Bellm. A very certain remedy, probatum est—Ha, ha, ha! poor George, thou art i'th' right, thou hast sold thyself to laughter; the ill-natured town will find the jest just where thou hast lost it. Ha, ha! how he struggled, like an old lawyer between two fees!

Vain. Or a young wench, between pleasure and reputation.

Bellm. Or as you did to-day, when half afraid you snatch'd a kiss from Araminta.

Vain. She has made a quarrel on't.

Bellm. Paugh! women are only angry at such offences, to have the pleasure of forgiving them.

Vain. And I love to have the pleasure of making my peace—I should not esteem a pardon if too easily won.

Bellm. Thou dost not know what thou wouldst be at : whether thou wouldst have her angry or pleased. Couldst thou be content to marry Araminta ?

Vain. Could you be content to go to heaven ?

Bellm. Hum ! not immediately ; on my conscience not heartily : I'd do a little more good in my generation first, in order to deserve it.

Vain. Nor I to marry Araminta till I merit her.

Bellm. But how the devil dost thou expect to get her, if she never yield ?

Vain. That's true ; but I would——

Bellm. Marry her without her consent ; thou'rt a riddle beyond woman——

Enter Setter.

Trusty Setter, what tidings ? how goes the project ?

Setter. As all lewd projects do, fir, where the devil prevents our endeavours with success.

Bellm. A good hearing, Setter.

Vain. Well, I'll leave you with your engineer.

Bellm. And hast thou provided necessaries ?

Setter. All, all, fir ; the large sanctified hat, and the little precise band, with a swinging long spiritual cloke, to cover carnal knavery——not forgetting the black patch, which Tribulation Spintext wears, as I'm inform'd, upon one eye, as a penal mourning for the ogling offences of his youth ; and some say, with that eye, he first discover'd the frailty of his wife.

Bellm. Well, in this fanatick father's habit, will I confess Lætitia.

Setter. Rather prepare her for confession, fir, by helping her to sin.

Bellm. Be at your master's lodging in the evening ; I shall use the robes. [Exeunt Bellm. and Vain.

Setter. I shall, fir—I wonder to which of these two gentlemen I do most properly appertain—the one uses me as his attendant ; the other (being the better acquainted with my parts) employs me as a pimp ! why that's much the more honourable employment—by all means

—I fol-

—I follow one as my master, t'other follows me as his conductor.

Enter Lucy.

Lucy. There's the hang-dog his man—I had a power over him in the reign of my mistress; but he is too true a valet de chambre not to affect his master's faults; and consequently is revolted from his allegiance.

Setter. Undoubtedly, 'tis impossible to be a pimp and not a man of parts; that is, without being politic, diligent, secret, wary, and so forth—And to all this valiant as Hercules—that is, passively valiant and actively obedient. Ah! Setter, what a treasure is here lost for want of being known!

Lucy. Here's some villainy a-foot, he's so thoughtful; may be I may discover something in my mask.—Worthy sir, a word with you. [puts on her mask.]

Setter. Why, if I were known, I might come to be a great man—

Lucy. Not to interrupt your meditation—

Setter. And I should not be the first that has procured his greatness by pimping.

Lucy. Now poverty and the pox light upon thee, for a contemplative pimp.

Setter. Ha! what art thou, who thus maliciously hast awaken'd me from my dream of glory? Speak, thou vile disturber—

Lucy. Of thy most vile cogitations.—Thou poor conceited wretch, how wert thou valuing thyself upon thy master's employment! For he's the head pimp to Mr. Bellmour.

Setter. Good words, damsel, or I shall.—But how dost thou know my master or me?

Lucy. Yes, I know both master and man to be—Setter. To be men, perhaps; nay, faith, like enough; I often march in the rear of my master, and enter the breaches which he has made.

Lucy. Ay, the breach of faith, which he has begun; thou traitor to thy lawful princess.

Setter. Why how now! prithee, who art thou? Lay by that worldly face, and produce your natural vizard.

Lucy. No, firrah, I'll keep it on to abuse thee, and leave thee without hopes of revenge.

Setter. Oh! I begin to smoke you: thou art some forsaken Abigail, we have dallied with heretofore—and art come to tickle thy imagination with remembrance of iniquity past.

Lucy. No, thou pitiful flatterer of thy master's imperfections; thou maukin, made up of the shreds and parings of his superfluous fopperies.

Setter. Thou art thy mistress's foul self, composed of her sullied iniquities and clothing.

† Lucy. Hang thee—beggar's cur!—thy master is but a mumper in love, lies canting at the gate; but never dares presume to enter the house.

Setter. Thou art the wicket to thy mistress's gate, to be opened for all comers. In fine, thou art the high road to thy mistress.

Lucy. Beast, filthy toad, I can hold no longer, look and tremble.

[unmasks.]

Setter. How, Mrs. Lucy!

Lucy. I wonder thou hast the impudence to look me in the face.

Setter. Adsbud, who's in fault, mistress of mine? who flung the first stone? Who undervalued my function? And who the devil could know you by instinct?

Lucy. You could know my office by instinct, and be hang'd, which you have slander'd most abominably. It vexes me not what you said of my person; but that my innocent calling should be exposed and scandalized—I cannot bear it.

Setter. Nay, faith, Lucy, I'm sorry, I'll own myself to blame, though we were both in fault as to our offices—Come I'll make you any reparation.

Lucy. Swear.

Setter. I do swear to the utmost of my power.

Lucy. To be brief then: what is the reason your master did not appear to-day, according to the summons I brought him?

Setter. To answer you as briefly—he has a cause to be tried in another court.

Lucy.

Lucy. Come, tell me in plain terms, how forward he is with Araminta.

Setter. Too forward to be turn'd back——Though he's a little in disgrace at present about a kiss which he forced. You and I can kiss, Lucy, without all that.

Lucy. Stand off——He's a precious jewel.

Setter. And therefore you'd have him to set in your lady's locket.

Lucy. Where is he now?

Setter. He'll be in the piazza presently.

Lucy. Remember to-day's behaviour——Let me see you with a penitent face.

Setter. What, no token of amity, Lucy? You and I don't use to part with dry lips.

Lucy. No, no, avaunt——I'll not be flabber'd and kiss'd now——I'm not in the humour.

Setter. I'll not quit you so——I'll follow and put you into the humour. [Exeunt.]

Enter Sir Joseph Wittoll and Bluffe.

Bluffe. And so, out of your unwonted generosity——

Sir J. Witt. And good-nature, Back; I am good-natured, and I can't help it.

Bluffe. You have given him a note upon Fondlewife for a hundred pounds.

Sir J. Witt. Ay, ay, poor fellow, he ventured fair for't.

Bluffe. You have disobliged me in it—for I have occasion for the money, and if you would look me in the face again and live, go, and force him to re-deliver you the note——go—and bring it me hither. I'll stay here for you.

Sir J. Witt. You may stay till the day of judgment then, by the Lord Harry. I know better things than to be run thro' the guts for a hundred pounds——Why, I gave that hundred pounds for being saved, and d'ye think, an there were no danger, I'll be so ungrateful to take it from the gentleman again?

Bluffe. Well, go to him from me——Tell him, I say, he must refund—or Bilbo's the word, and slaughter will ensue——if he refuse, tell him—but whisper that—tell him——I'll pink his soul—but whisper that softly to him.

Sir J. Witt. So softly, that he shall never hear on't, I warrant you—why, what a devil's the matter, Bully, are you mad? or d'ye think I'm mad? Egad, for my part, I don't love to be messenger of ill news: it is an ungrateful office——so tell him yourself.

Bluffe. By these hilts I believe he frighten'd you into this composition: I believe you gave it him out of fear, pure paltry fear——confess.

Sir J. Witt. No, no, hang't, I was not afraid neither—tho' I confess he did in a manner snap me up—yet I can't say that it was altogether out of fear, but partly to prevent mischief—for he was a devilish cholerick fellow: and if my choler had been up too, egad there would have been mischief done, that's flat. And yet I believe, if you had been by, I would as soon have let him had a hundred of my teeth. Adsheart, if he should come just now when I'm angry, I'd tell him—mum.

Enter Bellmour and Sharper.

Bellm. Thou'rt a lucky rogue; there's your benefactor: you ought to return him thanks now you have received the favour.

Sharp. Sir Joseph—Your note was accepted, and the money paid at fight; I'm come to return my thanks—

Sir J. Witt. They won't be accepted so readily as the bill, sir.

Bellm. I doubt the knight repents, Tom—He looks like the knight of the sorrowful face.

Sharp. This is a double generosity—Do me a kindness and refuse my thanks——But I hope you are not offended that I offer'd them.

Sir J. Witt. May be I am, sir, may be I am not, sir, may be I am both, sir! what then? I hope I may be offended without any offence to you, sir.

Sharp. Hey day! Captain, what's the matter? you can tell.

Bluffe. Mr. Sharper, the matter is plain—Sir Joseph has found out your trick, and does not care to be put upon, being a man of honour.

Sharp. Trick, sir?

Sir J. Witt. Ay, trick, sir, and won't be put upon, sir, being a man of honour, sir, and so, sir——

Sharp.

Sharp. Harkee, Sir Joseph, a word with you—in consideration of some favours lately received, I would not have you draw yourself into a premunire, by trusting to that sign of a man there—that pop-gun charged with wind.

Sir J. Witt. O Lord, O Lord! Captain, come justify yourself—I'll give him the lie if you'll stand to it.

Sharp. Nay then I'll be beforehand with you: take that—oaf. [cuffs him.]

Sir J. Witt. Captain, will you see this? Won't you pink his soul?

Bluffe. Huth't, 'tis not so convenient now—I shall find a time.

Sharp. What do you mutter about a time, rascal?—You were the incendiary—There's to put you in mind of your time—a memorandum. [kicks him.]

Bluffe. Oh this is your time, fir, you had best make use on't.

Sharp. Egad, and so I will: There's again for you.

[kicks him.]

Bluffe. You are obliging, fir, but this is too public a place to thank you in: But, in you ear, you are to be seen again.

Sharp. Ay, thou inimitable coward, and to be felt—as for example. [kicks him.]

Bellm. Ha, ha, ha! prithee come away, 'tis scandalous to kick this puppy, unless a man were cold, and had no other way to get himself a heat.

[Exeunt Bellm. and Sharper.]

Bluffe. Very well—very fine—But 'tis no matter—Is not this fine, Sir Joseph?

Sir J. Witt. Indifferent, egad, in my opinion, very indifferent—I'd rather go plain all my life, than wear such finery.

Bluffe. Death and hell! to be affronted thus! I'll die before I'll suffer it. [draws.]

Sir J. Witt. O Lord, his anger was not raised before—Nay, dear Captain, don't be in a passion now he's gone—Put up, put up, dear Back, 'tis your Sir Joseph begs; come, let me kiss thee; so, so, put up, put up.

Bluffe. By heaven 'tis not to be put up.

Sir J. Witt. What, Bully?

Bluffe. The affront.

Sir J. Witt. No, egad, no more it is, for that's put up already; thy sword I mean.

Bluffe. Well, Sir Joseph, at your intreaty—But were not you, my friend, abused, and cufft, and kickt?

[putting up his sword.]

Sir J. Witt. Ay, ay, so were you too; no matter, 'tis past.

Bluffe. By the immortal thunder of great guns, 'tis false—he sucks not vital air who dares affirm it to this face.

[looks big.]

Sir J. Witt. To that face I grant you, Captain—No, no, I grant you—not to that face, by the Lord Harry—If you had put on your fighting face before, you had done his business—he durst as soon have kiss'd you, as kick'd you to your face—But a man can no more help what's done behind his back, than what's said—Come, we'll think no more of what's past.

Bluffe. I'll call a council of war within to consider of my revenge to come.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE, Silvia's Apartment. Enter Heartwell and Silvia.

S O N G.

As Amoret and Thyrsis lay

Melting the hours in gentle play;

Joining faces, mingling kisses,

And exchanging harmless blisses:

He trembling cried, with eager haste,

O let me feed as well as taste,

I die, if I'm not wholly blest.

After the Song, a Dance of Anticks.

Silv. Indeed, it is very fine—I could look upon them all day.

Heart. Well, has this prevail'd for me, and will you look upon me?

Silv. If you could sing and dance so, I should love to look upon you too.

Heart. Why 'twas I sung and danced; I gave music to the voice, and life to their measures—Look you here, Silvia [pulling out a purse and chinking it] Here are are songs and dances, poetry and music—Hark! how sweetly one guinea rhymes to another!—and how they dance to the music of their own chink! This buys all the other—and this thou shalt have; this, and all that I am worth, for the purchase of thy love—Say, is it mine then, ha? Speak, Syren—Oons, why do I look on her! Yet I must. Speak, dear angel, devil, faint, witch; do not rack me with suspense.

Silv. Nay, don't stare at me so—You make me blush—I cannot look.

Heart. O manhood, where art thou? What am I come to? A woman's toy, at these years! Death, a bearded baby for a girl to dandle. O dotage, dotage! That ever that noble passion, lust, should ebb to this degree—No reflux of vigorous blood: but milky love supplies the empty channels; and prompts me to the softness of a child—a meer infant, and would suck. Can you love me, Silvia? speak.

Silv. I dare not speak till I believe you, and indeed, I'm afraid to believe you yet.

Heart. Death, how her innocence torments and pleases me! Lying, child, is indeed the art of love, and men are generally masters in it: but I'm so newly entered, you cannot distrust me of any skill in the treacherous mystery—Now, by my soul, I cannot lie, though it were to serve a friend or gain a mistress.

Silv. Must you lie then, if you say you love me?

Heart. No, no, dear ignorance, thou beauteous changeling—I tell thee I do love thee, and tell it for a truth, a naked truth, which I'm ashamed to discover.

Silv. But love, they say, is a tender thing, that will smooth frowns, and make calm an angry face; will soften a rugged temper, and make ill-humoured people good: You look ready to fright one, and talk as if your passion were not love but anger.

Heart. 'Tis both; for I am angry with myself when I am pleased with you—And a pox upon me for loving thee so well—yet I must on—'Tis a bearded arrow, and will more easily be thrust forward than drawn back.

Silv. Indeed, if I were well assured you loved; but how can I be well assured?

Heart. Take the symptoms—and ask all the tyrants of thy sex, if their fools are not known by this party-coloured livery—I am melancholic, when thou art absent; look like an ass, when thou art present; wake for thee, when I should sleep; and even dream of thee, when I am awake; sigh much, drink little, eat less, court solitude, am grown very entertaining to myself, and (as I am informed) very troublesome to every body else. If this be not love, it is madness, and then it is pardonable—Nay, yet a more certain sign than all this; I give thee my money.

Silv. Ay, but that is no sign; for they say, gentlemen will give money to any naughty woman to come to bed to them—O Gemini, I hope you don't mean so—for I won't be a whore.

Heart. The more is the pity. [aside.]

Silv. Nay, if you would marry me, you should not come to bed to me—you have such a beard, and would so prickle one. But do you intend to marry me?

Heart. That a fool should ask such a malicious question! Death, I shall be drawn in, before I know where I am—However, I find I am pretty sure of her consent, if I am put to it. [aside.] Marry you? no, no, I'll love you.

Silv. Nay, but if you love me, you must marry me; what, don't I know my father loved my mother, and was married to her?

Heart. Ay, ay, in old days people married where they loved; but that fashion is changed, child.

Silv. Never tell me that, I know it is not changed by myself; for I love you, and would marry you.

Heart. I'll have my beard shaved, it shan't hurt thee, and we'll go to bed—

Silv. No, no, I'm not such a fool neither, but I can keep myself honest.—Here, I won't keep any thing that's yours, I hate you now, [throws the purse] and I'll never see you again, 'cause you'd have me be naught.

Heart.]

Heart. Damn her, let her go, and a good riddance—Yet so much tenderness and beauty, and honesty together, is a jewel—Stay, Silvia—But then to marry—why every man plays the fool once in his life; but to marry is playing the fool all one's life long.

Silv. What did you call me for?

Heart. I'll give thee all I have; and thou shalt live with me in every thing so like my wife, the world shall believe it: nay, thou shalt think so thyself—Only let me not think so.

Silv. No, I'll die before I'll be your whore—as well as I love you.

Heart. [aside.] A woman, and ignorant, may be honest, when 'tis out of obstinacy and contradiction—But, 'sdeath! it is but a may be, and upon scurvy terms—Well, farewell then—if I can get out of sight, I may get the better of myself.

Silv. Well—good bye.

[turns and weeps.]

Heart. Ha! Nay come, we'll kiss at parting [kisses her.] By heaven, her kiss is sweeter than liberty—I will marry thee—There thou hast done't. All my resolves melted in that kiss—one more.

Silv. But when?

Heart. I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool—I will about a licence straight—in the evening expect me—One kiss more to confirm me mad; so.

[Exit.]

Silv. Ha, ha, an old fox trap!—

Enter Lucy.

Bless me! you frightened me, I thought he had been come again, and had heard me.

Lucy. Lord, madam, I met your lover in as much haste, as if he had been going for a midwife.

Silv. He's going for a parson, girl, the forerunner of a midwife some nine months hence—Well, I find dissembling to our sex is as natural as swimming to a negro; we may depend upon our skill to save us at a plunge, tho' till then we never make the experiment—But how hast thou succeeded?

Lucy. As you would wish—Since there is no reclaiming Vainlove, I have found out a pique she has taken at him; and have framed a letter that makes her sue for reconciliation first. I know that will do—walk in, and I'll shew it you. Come, madam, you're like to have a happy time on't, both your love and anger satisfied!—All that can charm our sex conspire to please you.

*That woman sure enjoys a blessed night,
Whom love and vengeance both at once delight.* [Exeunt.
End of the Third Act.

A C T IV.

Enter Bellmour, in a fanatic habit, and Setter.

Bellm. 'TIS pretty near the hour. [looking on his watch]—Well and how, Setter, ha? Does my hypocrisy fit me, ha? Does it fit easy on me?

Setter. O most religiously well, fir.

Bellm. I wonder why all our young fellows should glory in an opinion of atheism, when they may be so much more conveniently lewd under the coverlet of religion.

Setter. 'Sbud, fir, away quickly, there's Fondlewife just turned the corner, and's coming this way.

Bellm. Gad so, there he is, he must not see me.

[Exeunt.

Enter Fondlewife and Barnaby.

Fond. I say, I will tarry at home.

Barn. But, fir!

Fond. Good lack! I profess the spirit of contradiction hath possess'd the lad—I say I will tarry at home—Varlet.

Barn. I have done, fir, then farewell five hundred pounds.

Fond. Ha, how's that? Stay, stay, did you leave word, say you, with his wife, with Comfort herself?

Barn. I did; and Comfort will send Tribulation hither as soon as ever he comes home—I could have brought young Mr. Prig, to have kept my mistress company in the mean time; but you say——

Fond. How, how, say, Varlet! I say let him not come near my doors; I say he is a wanton young Levite, and pampampereth himself up with dainties, that he may look lovely in the eyes of women——Sincerely, I am afraid he hath already defiled the tabernacle of our sister Comfort; while her good husband is deluded by his godly appearance——I say, that even lust doth sparkle in his eyes, and glow upon his cheeks, and that I would as soon trust my wife with a lord's high-fed chaplain.

Barn. Sir, the hour draws nigh——and nothing will be done there till you come.

Fond. And nothing can be done here till I go——So that I'll tarry, d'ye see.

Barn. And run the hazard to lose your affair, sir!

Fond. Good lack, good lack——I profess it is a very sufficient vexation, for a man to have a handsome wife.

Barn. Never, sir, but when the man is an insufficient husband. 'Tis then indeed, like the vanity of taking a fine house, and yet be forced to let lodgings, to help pay the rent.

Fond. I profess a very apt comparison, Varlet. Go and bid my Cocky come out to me, I will give her some instructions, I will reason with her before I go.

[Exit Barnaby.]

And in the mean time, I will reason with myself——Tell me, Isaac, why art thee jealous? why art thee distrustful of the wife of thy bosom?——Because she is young and vigorous, and I am old and impotent——Then why didst thee marry, Isaac?——Because she was beautiful and tempting, and because I was obstinate and doating; so that my inclination was (and is still) greater than my power——And will not that which tempted thee also tempt others, who will tempt her, Isaac?——I fear it much——But does not thy wife love thee, nay dote upon thee?——Yes——Why then! Ay, but to say truth, she's fonder of me, than she has reason to be; and in the way of trade, we still suspect the smoothest dealers of the deepest designs——And that she has some designs deeper than thou canst reach, thou hast experimented, Isaac——But mum.

Enter Lætitia.

Læt. I hope my dearest jewel is not going to leave me—are you, Nykin?

Fond.

Fond. Wife—have you thoroughly consider'd how detestable, how heinous, and how crying a sin the sin of adultery is? have you weigh'd it, I say? For it is a very weighty sin; and although it may lie heavy upon thee, yet thy husband must also bear his part: for thy iniquity will fall upon his head.

Lat. Bless me, what means my dear?

Fond. [aside.] I profess she has an alluring eye; I am doubtful, whether I shall trust her, even with Tribulation himself—Speak, I say, have you considered what it is to cuckold your husband?

Lat. [aside.] I'm amazed: sure he has discover'd nothing—Who has wrong'd me to my dearest? I hope my jewel does not think, that ever I had any such thing in my head, or ever will have.

Fond. No, no, I tell you I shall have it in my head—

Lat. [aside.] I know not what to think. But I'm resolv'd to find the meaning of it—Unkind dear! was it for this you sent to call me? is it not affliction enough that you are to leave me, but you must study to increase it by unjust suspicions? [crying] Well—well—you know my fondness, and you love to tyrannize—Go on, cruel man, do, triumph over my poor heart, while it holds, which cannot be long, with this usage of yours—But that's what you want—Well, you will have your ends soon—You will—you will—yes it will break to oblige you. [fighs.]

Fond. Verily I fear I have carried the jest too far—Nay, look you now if she does not weep—'tis the fondest fool—Nay, Cocky, Cocky, nay, dear Cooky, don't cry, I was but in jest, I was not i'feck.

Lat. [aside.] O then all's safe. I was terribly frightened.—My affliction is always your jest, barbarous man! oh, that I should love to this degree! yet—

Fond. Nay, Cocky.

Lat. No, no, you are weary of me, that's it—that's all, you would get another wife—another fond fool, to break her heart—Well, be as cruel as you can to me, I'll pray for you; and when I am dead with grief, may you have one that will love you as well as I have done: I shall be contented to lie at peace in my cold grave—since it will please you. [Sighs.]

Fond. Good lack, good lack, she would melt a heart of oak—I profess I can hold no longer—Nay, dear Cocky—I'feck you'll break my heart—I'feck you will—See you have made me weep—made poor Nykin weep—Nay, come kifs, buse poor Nykin—and I won't leave thee—I'll lose all first.

Læt. [aside.] How! Heaven forbid! that will be carrying the jest too far indeed.

Fond. Won't you kifs Nykin?

Læt. Go, naughty Nykin, you don't love me.

Fond. Kifs, kifs, i'feck I do.

Læt. No, you don't.

[She kisses him.]

Fond. What, not love Cocky!

Læt. No—h.

[Sighs.]

Fond. I profess, I do love thee better than five hundred pounds—and so thou shalt say, for I'll leave it to stay with thee.

Læt. No, you shan't neglect your business for me—No indeed you shan't, Nykin——If you don't go, I'll think you are jealous of me still.

Fond. He, he, he! wilt thou, poor fool? Then I will go, I won't be jealous—Poor Cocky, kifs Nykin, kifs Nykin, ee, ee, ee—Here will be the good man anon, to talk to Cocky, and teach her how a wife ought to behave herself.

Læt. [aside.] I hope to have one that will shew me how a husband ought to behave himself—I shall be glad to learn, to please my jewel. [Kifs.]

Fond. That's my good dear—Come, kifs Nykin once more, and then get you in—so—get you in, get you in. By, by.

Læt. By, Nykin.

Fond. By, Cocky.

Læt. By, Nykin.

Fond. By, Cocky, by, by.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Vainlove and Sharper.

Sharp. How! Araminta lost!

Vain. To confirm what I have said, read this—— [gives a letter.]

Sharp.

Sharp. [Reads] Hum, hum—And what then appear'd a fault, upon reflection, seems only an effect of a too powerful passion. I'm afraid I give too great a proof of my own at this time—I am in disorder for what I have written. But something, I know not what, forced me. I only beg a favourable censure of this, and your Araminta.

Sharp. Lost! Pray Heaven thou hast not lost thy wits. Here, here, she's thy own, man, sign'd and seal'd too——To her, man——a delicious melon, pure and consenting ripe, and only waits thy cutting up——She has been breeding love to thee all this while, and just now she's deliver'd of it.

Vain. 'Tis an untimely fruit, and she has miscarried of her love.

Sharp. Never leave this damn'd, ill-natured whimsy, Frank? Thou hast a sickly peevish appetite; only chew love and cannot digest it.

Vain. Yes, when I feed myself—but I hate to be cramm'd——By Heaven, there's not a woman will give a man the pleasure of a chace: my sport is always balk'd, or cut short—I stumble over the game I would pursue——'Tis dull and unnatural to have a hare run full in the hound's mouth, and would distaste the keenest hunter——I would have overtaken, not have met my game.

Sharp. However, I hope you don't mean to forsake it; that will be but a kind of a mungrel cur's trick. Well, are you for the Mall?

Vain. No, she will be there this evening——Yes, I will go too—and she shall see her error in——

Sharp. In her choice, egad——But thou canst not be so great a brute as to slight her?

Vain. I should disappoint her if I did not——By her management I should think she expects it.

All naturally fly what does pursue;

'Tis fit men should be coy, when women woo. [Exeunt.]

SCENE, A room in Fondlewife's house.

A Servant introducing Bellmour in fanatic habit, with a patch upon one eye, and a book in his hand.

Serv. Here's a chair, sir, if you please to repose yourself. My mistress is coming, sir.

Bell.

Bell. Secure in my disguise, I have out-faced suspicion, and even dared discovery—This cloke my sanctity, and trusty Scarron's novels my prayer-book—methinks I am the very picture of Montufar in the Hypocrites—Oh! she comes.

Enter Lætitia.

*So breaks Aurora through the veil of night,
Thus fly the clouds, divided by her light,
And ev'ry eye receives a new-born sight.*

[throwing off his cloke, patch, &c.]

Læt. Thus strew'd with blushes, like—Ah! Heaven defend me! who's this? [discovering him, starts.]

Bell. Your lover.

Læt. Vainlove's friend! I know his face, and he has betray'd me to him. [aside.]

Bell. You are surpris'd. Did you not expect a lover, madam? Those eyes shone kindly on my first appearance, tho' now they are o'ercast.

Læt. I may well be surpris'd at your person and impudence; they are both new to me—you are not what your first appearance promised: the piety of your habit was welcome, but not the hypocrisy.

Bell. Rather the hypocrisy was welcome, but not the hypocrite.

Læt. Who are you, sir? You have mistaken the house, sure.

Bell. I have directions in my pocket, which agree with every thing but your unkindness. [pulls out the letter.]

Læt. My letter! base Vainlove! then 'tis too late to dissemble. [aside.] 'Tis plain then you have mistaken the person. [going.]

Bell. If we part so I'm mistaken—Hold, hold, madam—I confess I have run into an error—I beg your pardon a thousand times—What an eternal block-head am I! can you forgive me the disorder I have put you into—But it is a mistake which any body might have made.

Læt. What can this mean? 'tis impossible he should be mistaken after all this—A handsome fellow if he had not surpris'd me: Methinks, now I look on him again, again, I would not have him mistaken. [aside] We are all liable to mistakes, sir; if you own it to be so, there needs no farther apology.

Bell. Nay, faith, madam, 'tis a pleasant one; and worth your hearing. Expecting a friend, last night, at his lodgings, till 'twas late, my intimacy with him gave me the freedom of his bed: He not coming home all night, a letter was deliver'd to me by a servant, in the morning: upon the perusal I found the contents so charming, that I could think of nothing all day, but putting them in practice——till just now, (the first time I ever look'd upon the superscription) I am the most surpris'd in the world to find it directed to Mr. Vainlove. Gad, madam, I ask you a million of pardons, and will make you any satisfaction.

Lat. I am discover'd——and either Vainlove is not guilty, or he has handsomely excus'd him. [aside]

Bell. You appear concern'd, madam.

Lat. I hope you are a gentleman;——and since you are privy to a weak woman's failing, won't turn it to the prejudice of her reputation. You look as if you had more honour——

Bell. And more love; or my face is a false witness, and deserves to be pilloried—No, by Heaven, I swear——

Lat. Nay, don't swear, if you'd have me believe you; but promise——

Bell. Well, I promise——A promise is so cold——Give me leave to swear——by those eyes, those killing eyes; by those healing lips—Oh! prels the soft charm close to mine, and seal them up for ever.

Lat. Upon that condition. [he kisses her.]

Bell. Eternity was in that moment——One more, upon any condition.

Lat. Nay, now——I never saw any thing so agreeably impudent. [aside.] Won't you censure me for this, now?——but 'tis to buy your silence. [kiss] Oh, but what am I doing?

Bell. Doing! No tongue can express it—not thy own; nor any thing, but thy lips. I am faint with excess of blifs:—Oh, for love-sake, lead me any whither, where I may

I may lie down—quickly, for I'm afraid I shall have a fit.

Læt. Bless me! what fit?

Bell. Oh, a convulsion—I feel the symptoms.

Læt. Does it hold you long? I'm afraid to carry you into my chamber.

Bell. Oh, no: let me lie down upon the bed;—the fit will be soon over. [Exeunt.]

SCENE, St. James's Park. Araminta and Belinda meeting.

Belin. Lard, my dear: I am glad I have met you—I have been at the Exchange since, and am so tired—

Aram. Why, what's the matter?

Belin. Oh the most inhuman, barbarous hackney-coach! I am jolted to a jelly—Am I not horridly touzed? [pulls out a pocket glass.]

Aram. Your head's a little out of order.

Belin. A little! O frightful! what a furious physz I have! O most rueful! ha, ha, ha! O Gad, I hope no body will come this way, till I have put myself a little in repair—Ah! my dear—I have seen such unbewn creatures since—Ha, ha, ha! I can't for my soul help thinking that I look just like one of them—Good dear, pin this, and I'll tell you—Very well—So, thank you, my dear—But as I was telling you—Pish, this is the untoward't lock—So, as I was telling you—How d'ye like me now? hideous, ha? frightful still? or how?

Aram. No, no; you're very well as can be.

Belin. And so—But where did I leave off, my dear? I was telling you—

Aram. You were about to tell me something, child—but you left off before you began.

Belin. Oh! a most comical sight: a country 'squire, with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mrs. Snipwell's shop while I was there—But, oh Gad! two such unlick'd cubs!

Aram. I warrant, plump, cherry-cheek'd country girls.

Belin. Ay, on my conscience, fat as barn-door fowl: but but so bedeck'd, you would have taken them for Friesland hens, with their feathers growing the wrong way — O, such outlandish creatures! such tramontanæ, and foreigners to the fashion, or any thing in practice! I had no patience to behold — I undertook the modelling of one of their fronts, the more modern structure —

Aram. Bless me, cousin; why would you affront any body so? They might be gentlewomen of a very good family —

Belin. Of a very ancient one, I dare swear, by their dress — Affront! pshaw, how you're mistaken! The poor creature, I warrant, was as full of courtesies, as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is, I did endeavour to make her look like a Christian — and she was sensible of it; for she thank'd me, and gave me two apples, piping hot, out of her under petticoat pocket — Ha, ha, ha! and t'other did so stare and gape — I fancied her like the front of her father's hall; her eyes were the two jut-windows, and her mouth the great door, most hospitably kept open for the entertainment of travelling flies.

Aram. So then; you have been diverted. What did they buy?

Belin. Why, the father bought a powder-horn, and an almanack, and a comb case; the mother, a great fruz-tower, and a fat amber necklace; the daughters only tore two pair of kid-leather gloves, with trying them on — Oh Gad, here comes the fool that dined at my Lady Freelove's t'other day.

Enter Sir Joseph and Bluffe.

Aram. May be he may not know us again.

Belin. We'll put on our masks to secure his ignorance. — [they put on their masks.]

Sir J. Witt. Nay, Gad, I'll pick up; I'm resolved to make a night on't — I'll go to Alderman Fondlewife by and by, and get fifty pieces more from him. Adslidikins, Bully, we'll wallow in wine and women. Why, this same Madeira wine has made me as light as a grasshopper — Hift, hift, Bully, dost thou see those tearers? [sings] Look you what here is — Look you what here is is—Toll—loll—dera—toll—loll— Egad, t'other glass of Madeira, and I durst have attack'd them in my own proper person, without your help.

Bluff. Come on then, knight — But d'ye know what to say to them?

Sir J. Witt. Say? pooh, pox, I've enough to say—never fear it—that is, if I can but think on't: truth is, I have but a treacherous memory.

Belin. O frightful! Cousin, what shall we do? These things come towards us.

Aram. No matter—I see Vainlove coming this way—and, to confess my failing, I am willing to give him an opportunity of making his peace with me—and to rid me of these coxcombs, when I seem oppress'd with them, will be a fair one.

Bluffe. Ladies, by these hilts, you are well met.

Aram. We are afraid not.

Bluffe. What says my pretty little knapsack carrier?

Belin. O monstrous filthy fellow! Good slovenly Captain Huffle, Bluffe (what is your hideous name?) be gone: you stink of brandy and tobacco, most soldier-like. Foh.

Sir J. Witt. Now am I flap-dash down in the mouth, and have not one word to say!

Aram. I hope my fool has not confidence enough to be troublesome.

Sir J. Witt. Hem! pray, madam, which way's the wind?

Aram. A pithy question—Have you sent your wits for a venture, sir, that you inquire?

Sir J. Witt. Nay, now I'm in—I can prattle like a magpye.

Enter Sharper and Vainlove.

Belin. Dear Araminta, I'm tired.

Aram. 'Tis but pulling off our masks, and obliging Vainlove to know us. I'll be rid of my fool by fair means—Well, Sir Joseph, you shall see my face—but, be gone immediately—I see one that will be jealous, to find me in discourse with you—Be discreet—no reply; but away.

[unmasks.

Sir

Sir J. Witt. The great fortune, that dined at my lady Freelove's! Sir Joseph, thou art a made man. Egad, I'm in love up to the ears. But I'll be discreet, and hush.

[aside.]

Bluffe. Nay, by the world, I'll see your face.

Belin. You shall.

[unmasks.]

Sharp. Ladies, your humble servant—We were afraid you would not have given us leave to know you.

Aram. We thought to have been private—but we find fools have the same advantage over a face in a mask, that a coward has, while the sword is in the scabbard—so were forced to draw in our own defence.

Bluffe. My blood rises at that fellow: I can't stay where he is; and I must not draw in the park.

[to Sir Joseph.]

Sir J. Witt. I wish I durst stay to let her know my lodging.

[Exeunt Sir Joseph and Bluffe.]

Sharp. There is in true beauty, as in courage, somewhat, which narrow souls cannot dare to admire—And see, the owls are fled as at the break of day.

Belin. Very courtly—I believe Mr. Vainlove has not rubb'd his eyes since break of day neither; he looks as if he durst not approach—Nay, come cousin, be friends with him—I swear he looks so very simply, ha, ha, ha!—Well, a lover in the state of separation from his mistress, is like a body without a soul. Mr. Vainlove, shall I be bound for your good behaviour for the future?

Vain. Now must I pretend ignorance equal to hers, of what she knows as well as I. [aside] Men are apt to offend ('tis true) where they find most goodness to forgive—but, madam, I hope I shall prove of a temper, not to abuse mercy, by committing new offences.

Aram. So cold!

[aside.]

Belin. I have broke the ice for you, Mr. Vainlove, and so I leave you. Come, Mr. Sharper, you and I will take a turn, and laugh at the vulgar—both the great vulgar and the small—O Gad! I have a great passion for Cowley—Don't you admire him?

Sharp. Oh, madam! he was our English Horace.

Belin.

Belin. Ah so fine! so extremely fine! so every thing in the world that I like—O Lord, walk this way—I see a couple, I'll give you their history.

[Exeunt Belinda and Sharper.]

Vain. I find, madam, the formality of the law must be observed, tho' the penalty of it be dispensed with; and an offender must plead to his arraignment, though he has his pardon in his pocket.

Aram. I'm amazed! this insolence exceeds t'other;—whoever has encouraged you to this assurance—presuming upon the easiness of my temper, has much deceived you, and so you shall find.

Vain. Hey-day! which way now? Here's fine doubling. [aside.]

Aram. Base man! was it not enough to affront me with your saucy passion?

Vain. You have given that passion a much kinder epithet than saucy, in another place.

Aram. Another place! Some villainous design to blast my honour—But tho' thou hadst all the treachery and malice of thy sex, thou canst not lay a blemish on my fame—No, I have not err'd in one favourable thought of mankind—How time might have deceived me in you, I know not; my opinion was but young, and your early baseness has prevented its growing to a wrong belief—Unworthy and ungrateful! be gone, and never see me more.

Vain. Did I dream? or do I dream? shall I believe my eyes or ears? The vision is here still—Your passion, madam, will admit of farther reasoning—But here's a silent witness of your acquaintance.

[Takes out the letter, and offers it: she snatches it, and throws it away.]

Aram. There's poison in every thing you touch—blisters will follow—

Vain. That tongue which denies what the hands have done.

Aram. Still mystically senseless and impudent—I find I must leave the place.

Vain. No, madam, I'm gone—She knows her name's to

to it, which she will be unwilling to expose to the censure of the first finder.

Aram. Woman's obstinacy made me blind, to what woman's curiosity now tempts me to see.

[takes up the letter. Exit.]

Enter Belinda and Sharper.

Belin. Nay, we have spared no body, I swear. Mr. Sharper, you're a pure man; where did you get this excellent talent of railing?

Sharp. Faith, madam, the talent was born with me:—I confess, I have taken care to improve it; to qualify me for the society of ladies.

Belin. Nay, sure, railing is the best qualification in a woman's man.

Enter Footman.

Sharp. The second best—indeed I think.

Belin. How now, Pace? where's my cousin?

Foot. She's not very well, madam, and has sent to know, if your ladyship would have the coach come again for you?

Belin. O Lord, no, I'll go along with her. Come, Mr. Sharper. [Exeunt.]

SCENE, A chamber in Fondlewife's house.

Lætitia and Bellmour, his cloak, bat, &c. lying loose about the chamber.

Bell. Here's nobody nor no noise—'twas nothing but your fears.

Læt. I durst have sworn I had heard my monster's voice—I swear I was heartily frightened—Feel how my heart beats.

Bell. 'Tis an alarm to love—come in again, and let us—

Fond. [without] Cocky, Cocky, where are you, Cocky? I'm come home.

Læt. Ah! there he is, make haste, gather up your things!

Fond. Cocky, Cocky, open the door.

Bell. Pox choke him, would his horns were in his throat. My patch, my patch.

[looking about, and gathering up his things.]

Læt.

Lat. My jewel, art thou there? No matter for your patch!—You s'an't tum in, Nykin—Run into my chamber, quickly, quickly. You s'an't tum in.

Fond. Nay, pr'ythee, dear, i'feck I'm in haste.

Lat. Then I'll let you in. [opens the door.]

Enter Fondlewife and Sir Joseph Wittoll.

Fond. Kifs, dear—I met the master of the ship by the way—and I must have my papers of accompts out of your cabinet.

Lat. Oh! I'm undone! [aside.]

Sir J. Witt. Pray, first let me have fifty pounds, good alderman, for I'm in haste.

Fond. A hundred has already been paid, by your order. Fifty? I have the sum ready in gold, in my closet. [Exit.]

Sir J. Witt. Egad, it's a curious fine, pretty rogue; I'll speak to her.—Pray, madam, what news d'ye hear?

Lat. Sir, I seldom stir abroad.

[walks about in disorder.]

Sir J. Witt. I wonder at that, madam, for 'tis most curious fine weather.

Lat. Methinks it has been very ill weather.

Sir J. Witt. As you say, madam, 'tis pretty bad weather, and has been so a great while.

Enter Fondlewife.

Fond. Here are fifty pieces in this purse, Sir Joseph—If you will tarry a moment, till I fetch my papers, I'll wait upon you down stairs.

Lat. Ruined, past redemption; What shall I do—Ha! this fool may be of use. (aside.)—[As Fondlewife is going into the chamber, she runs to Sir Joseph, almost pushes him down, and cries out,] Stand off, rude ruffian! Help me, my dear—O blefs me! why will you leave me alone with such a satyr?

Fond. Blefs us! what's the matter? what's the matter?

Lat. Your back was no sooner turned; but, like a lion, he came open mouthed upon me, and would have ravished a kifs from me by main force.

Sir J. Witt. O Lord! Oh terrible! ha, ha, ha! is your wife mad, alderman?

Lat. Oh! I'm sick with the fright; won't you take him out of my sight?

Fond. Oh traitor! I'm astonished. Oh bloody-minded traitor!

Sir J. Witt. Hey-day! Traitor yourself! — By the Lord Harry, I was in most danger of being ravished, if you go to that.

Fond. Oh, how the blasphemous wretch swears! out of my house, thou son of the whore of Babylon; offspring of Bell and the Dragon! — Bless us! ravish my wife! my Dinah! Oh Shechemite! be gone, I say.

Sir J. Witt. Why, the devil's in the people, I think. [Exit.]

Lat. Oh! won't you follow, and see him out of doors, my dear?

Fond. I'll shut this door, to secure him from coming back — Give me the key of your cabinet, Cocky — Ravish my wife before my face! I warrant he's a papist in his heart, at least, if not a Frenchman.

Lat. What can I do now! [aside.] — Oh! my dear, I have been in such a fright, that I forgot to tell you, poor Mr. Spintext has a sad fit of the cholic, and is forced to lie down upon our bed — You'll disturb him; I can tread softer.

Fond. Alack, poor man! — No, no — you don't know the papers — I won't disturb him; give me the key.

[She gives him the key, goes to the chamber door, and speaks aloud.]

Lat. 'Tis nobody but Mr. Fondlewife, Mr. Spintext, lie still on your stomach; lying on your stomach will ease you of the cholic.

Fond. Ay, ay, lie still, lie still; don't let me disturb you. [Exit.]

Lat. Sure, when he does not see his face, he won't discover him! Dear fortune, help me but this once, and I'll never run into thy debt again — But this opportunity is the devil.

Fondlewife returns, with papers.

Fond. Good lack! good lack! — I profess, the poor man is in great torment, he lies as flat — Dear, you should heat a trencher, or a napkin — Where's Deborah? let

M^R FOOTE as FONDLEWIFE.

Oh thou salacious Woman! Am I then brutified!

Published Aug^r 31. 1776, by T. Towns & Co. in.

Let her clap some warm thing to his stomach, or chafe it with a warm hand, rather than fail. What book's this?

[sees the book that Bellmour forgot.]

Læt. Mr. Spintext's prayer-book, dear. — Pray heaven it be a prayer-book! [aside.]

Fond. Good man! I warrant he dropt it on purpose that you might take it up, and read some of the pious ejaculations! [taking up the book.] O bless me! O monstrous! A prayer-book? ay, this is the devil's pater-noster. Hold, let me see; The Innocent Adultery.

Læt. Misfortune! now all's ru'd again. [aside.]

Bellmour [peeping.] Damn'd chance! If I had gone a whoring with the Practice of Piety in my pocket, I had never been discovered.

Fond. Adultery and innocent! O Lord! here's doctrine! ay, here's discipline!

Læt. Dear husband, I'm amazed:—Sure it is a good book, and only tends to the speculation of sin.

Fond. Speculation! no, no; something went farther than speculation when I was not to be let in—Where is this apocryphal elder! I'll ferret him.

Læt. I'm so distracted, I can't think of a lie. [aside.]

Fondlewife hauling out Bellmour.

Fond. Come out here, thou Ananias incarnate—who, how now! who have we here?

Læt. Ha!

[shrieks, as surpris'd.]

Fond. Oh, thou salacious woman! am I then brutified,? ay, I feel it here; I sprout, I bud, I blossom, I am ripe-horn-mad. But who in the devil's name are you? mercy on me for swearing! but—

Læt. Oh, goodness keep us! who's this? who are you? what are you?

Bellm. Soh.

Læt. In the name of the—O! good, my dear, don't come near it, I'm afraid 'tis the devil; indeed it has hoofs, dear.

Fond. Indeed, and I have horns, dear. The devil! no, I am afraid, 'tis the flesh, thou harlot. Dear, with the pox. Come, Syren, speak, confess, who is this reverend, brawny pastor?

D.

Læt.

Lat. Indeed, and indeed now, my dear Nykin—I never saw this wicked man before.

Fond. Oh, it is a man then, it seems.

Lat. Rather, sure, it is a wolf in the clothing of a sheep.

Fond. Thou art a devil, in his proper clothing, woman's flesh. What, you know nothing of him, but his fleece here!—You don't love mutton?—you Magdalen unconverted!

Bellm. Well, now, I know my cue—That is, very honourably to excuse her, and very impudently accuse myself. [aside.

Lat. Why then, I wish I may never enter into the heaven of your embraces again, my dear, if ever I saw his face before.

Fond. O Lord! O strange! I am in admiration of your impudence. Look at him a little better; he is more modest, I warrant you, than to deny it. Come, were you two never face to face before? Speak.

Bellm. Since all artifice is vain—and I think myself obliged to speak the truth, in justice to your wife—No.

Fond. Humph.

Lat. No, indeed, dear.

Fond. Nay, I find you are both in a story; that I must confess. But, what—not to be cured of the cholic? don't you know your patient, Mrs. Quack? Oh, lie upon your stomach, lying upon your stomach will cure you of the cholic. Ah! answer me, Jezabel.

Lat. Let the wicked man answer for himself; does he think that I have nothing to do but excuse him? It is enough, if I can clear my own innocence to my own dear.

Bellm. By my troth, and so it is—I have been a little too backward, that is the truth on it.

Fond. Come, sir, who are you, in the first place? and what are you?

Bellm. A whore-master.

Fond. Very concise.

Lat. O beastly, impudent creature!

Fond. Well, sir, and what came you hither for?

Bellm. To lie with your wife.

Fond.

THE OLD BACHELOR.

53

Fond. Good again!—A very civil person this, and I believe speaks truth.

Lat. Oh, insupportable impudence!

Fond. Well, sir—pray be covered—And you have—heh! you have finished the matter, heh? and I am, as I should be, a sort of a civil perquisite to a whore-master, called a cuckold, heh? Is it not so? come, I'm inclining to believe every word you say.

Bellm. Why, faith, I must confess, so I designed you—But, you were a little unlucky in coming so soon, and hindered the making of your own fortune.

Fond. Humph. Nay, if you mince the matter once, and go back of your word, you are not the person I took you for. Come, come, go on boldly—What! don't be ashamed of your profession—Confess, confess; I shall love thee the better for't—I shall, i'feck—What! dost think I don't know how to behave myself in the employment of a cuckold, and have been three years apprentice to matrimony? Come, come; plain-dealing is a jewel.

Bellm. Well; since I see thou art a good honest fellow, I'll confess the whole matter to thee.

Fond. Oh, I'm a very honest fellow—You never lay with an honest man's wife in your life.

Lat. How my heart aches! all my comfort lies in his impudence; and, heaven be praised, he has a considerable portion. [aside.]

Bellm. In short, then, I was informed of the opportunity of your absence by my spy (for, faith, honest Isaac, I have a long time designed thee this favour); I knew Spintext was to come by your direction—but I laid a trap for him, and procured his habit; in which I passed upon your servants, and was conducted hither. I pretended a fit of the cholic, to excuse my lying down upon your bed; hoping that, when she heard of it, her good-nature would bring her to administer remedies for my distemper—You know what might have followed—But, like an uncivil person, you knocked at the door before your wife was come to me.

Fond. Ha! this is apocryphal; I may choose whether I will believe it or no.

Bellm. That you may, faith! and I hope you won't believe a word on't—But I can't help telling the truth for my life.

Fond. How! would not you have me believe you, say you?

Bellm. No; for then you must of consequence part with your wife, and there will be some hopes of having her upon the public; then the encouragement of a separate maintenance—

Fond. No, no: for that matter—when she and I part, she'll carry her separate maintenance about her.

Lat. Ah, cruel dear! how can you be so barbarous? You'll break my heart, if you talk of parting. [cries.]

Fond. Ah, dissembling vermin!

Bellm. How canst thou be so cruel, Isaac? thou hast the heart of a mountain-tiger. By the faith of a sincere sinner, she's innocent, for me. Go to him, madam; fling your snowy arms about his stubborn neck; bathe his relentless face in your salt trickling tears—

[She goes and hangs upon his neck, and kisses him.]

Bellmour kisses her hand behind Fondlewife's back. So! a few soft words and a kiss, and the good man melts. See how kind nature works and boils over in him!

Lat. Indeed, my dear, I was but just come down stairs, when you knocked at the door; and the maid told me Mr. Spintext was ill of the cholic upon our bed. And won't you speak to me, cruel Nykin? Indeed, I'll die, if you don't.

Fond. Ah! no, no; I cannot speak, my heart's so full—I have been a tender husband, a tender yoke-fellow; you know I have—But thou hast been a faithless Dalilah; and the Philistines—heh! Art thou not vile and unclean, heh? Speak! [weeping.]

Lat. No-h. [sighing.]

Fond. O that I could believe thee!

Lat. Oh! my heart will break. [seeming to faint.]

Fond. Heh! how? No; stay, stay; I will believe thee, I will—Pray bend her forward, sir.

Lat. Oh! oh! Where is my dear?

Fond.

Fond. Here! here! I do believe thee. I won't believe my own eyes.

Bellm. For my part, I am so charmed with the love of your turtle to you, that I'll go and solicit matrimony with all my might and main.

Fond. Well, well, fir, as long as I believe it, 'tis well enough. No thanks to you, fir, for her virtue—But I'll shew you the way out of my house, if you please—Come, my dear. Nay, I will believe thee; I do, i'feck!

Bellm. See the great blessing of an easy faith! opinion cannot err.

*No husband by his wife can be deceiv'd;
She still is virtuous, if she's so believ'd.* [Exeunt.

End of the Fourth Act.

A C T V.

SCENE, The Street.

Enter Bellmour in a fanatic habit, and Setter.

Bellm. SETTER! well encountered.

Sett. Joy of your return, fir! Have you made a good voyage? or have you brought your own lading back?

Bellm. No; I have brought nothing but ballast back—made a delicious voyage, Setter; and might have rode at anchor in the port till this time, but the enemy surpris'd us—I would unrig.

Sett. I attend you, fir.

Bellm. Ha! is not that Heartwell at Silvia's door? Be gone quickly; I'll follow you—I would not be known. Pox take them! they stand just in my way.

[Exit Setter.

Enter Heartwell and Lucy.

Heart. I'm impatient till it be done.

Lucy. That may be, without troubling yourself to go again for your brother's chaplain. Don't you see that stalking form of godliness?

Heart. O ay; he is a fanatic.

Lucy. An executioner qualified to do your business. He has been lawfully ordained.

Heart. I'll pay him well, if you'll break the matter to him. [Exit.]

Lucy. I warrant you—Do you go and prepare your bride.

Bellm. Humph! fits the wind there?—What a lucky rogue am I! Oh, what sport will be here, if I can persuade this wench to secrecy!

Lucy. Sir! reverend sir!

Bellm. Madam! [discovers himself.]

Lucy. Now, goodness have mercy upon me! Mr. Bellmour! is it you?

Bellm. Even I. What dost think?

Lucy. Think! that I should not believe my eyes, and that you are not what you seem to be.

Bellm. True. But, to convince thee who I am, thou knowest my old token. [kisses her.]

Lucy. Nay, Mr. Bellmour: O Lord! I believe you are a parson in good earnest, you kiss so devoutly.

Bellm. Well, your business with me, Lucy?

Lucy. I had none, but through mistake.

Bellm. Which mistake you must go through with, Lucy—Come, I know the intrigue between Heartwell and your mistress; and you mistook me for Tribulation Spintext, to marry them—ha! are not matters in this posture?—Confess:—Come, I'll be faithful; I will I faith—What! disside in me, Lucy?

Lucy. Alas-a-day! you and Mr. Vainlove, between you, have ruined my poor mistress: you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her if she make it up with a husband?

Bellm. Well, is it as I say?

Lucy. Well, it is then: but you'll be secret?

Bellm. Phuh, secret, ay:—And, to be out of thy debt, I'll trust thee with another secret. Your mistress must not marry Heartwell, Lucy.

Lucy. How! O Lord!—

Bellm. Nay, don't be in a passion, Lucy:—I'll provide a fitter husband for her.—Come, here's earnest of my good intentions for thee too; let this mollify—[gives her] her money.] Look you, Heartwell is my friend; and tho' he be blind, I must not see him fall into the snare, and unwittingly marry a whore.

Lucy. Whore! I'd have you to know my mistress scorns—

Bellm. Nay, nay: look you, Lucy; there are whores of as good quality.—But to the purpose, if you will give me leave to acquaint you with it.—Do you carry on the mistake of me: I'll marry them.—Nay, don't pause;—if you do, I'll spoil all.—I have some private reasons for what I do, which I'll tell you within. In the mean time, I promise—and rely upon me—to help your mistress to a husband: nay, and thee too, Lucy.—Here's my hand, I will; with a fresh assurance.

[gives her more money.]

Lucy. Ah, the devil is not so cunning.—You know my easy nature.—Well, for once I'll venture to serve you; but, if you do deceive me, the curse of all kind, tender-hearted women light upon you!

Bellm. That's as much as to say, The pox take me! —Well, lead on.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Vainlove, Sharper, and Setter.

Sharper. Just now, say you, gone in with Lucy?

Setter. I saw him, sir, and stood at the corner where you found me, and overheard all they said: Mr. Bellmour is to marry them.

Sharper. Ha, ha; 'twill be a pleasant cheat—I'll plague Heartwell when I see him. Pr'ythee, Frank, let's tease him; make him fret till he foam at the mouth, and disgorge his matrimonial oath with interest—Come, thou art musty—

Setter. [to Sharper.] Sir, a word with you.

[whispers him.]

Vain. Sharper swears she has forsworn the letter—I'm sure he tells me truth—but I am not sure she told him truth.—Yet she was unaffectedly concerned, he says; and often blushed with anger and surprise:—And so I remember in the park.—She had reason, if I wrong her—I begin to doubt.

Sharper. Sayest thou so?

D 5.

Setter.

Setter. This afternoon, fir, about an hour before my master received the letter.

Sharp. In my conscience, like enough.

Setter. Ay, I know her, fir; at least I'm sure I can fish it out of her: she's the very sluice to her lady's secrets:—'Tis but setting her mill a going, and I can drain her of them all.

Sharp. Here, Frank, your blood-hound has made out the fault. This letter, that so sticks in thy maw, is counterfeit; only a trick of Silvia in revenge, contrived by Lucy.

Vainl. Ha! It has a colour—But how do you know it, firrah?

Setter. I do suspect as much;—because why, fir—She was pumping me about how your worship's affairs stood towards madam Araminta; as, when you had seen her last? when you were to see her next? and, where you were to be found at that time? and such like.

Vainl. And where did you tell her?

Setter. In the Piazza.

Vainl. There I received the letter—It must be so—And why did you not find me out, to tell me this before, sot?

Setter. Sir, I was pimping for Mr. Bellmour.

Sharp. You were well employed;—I think there is no objection to the excuse.

Vainl. Pox on my saucy credulity!—If I have lost her, I deserve it. But, if confession and repentance be of force, I'll win her, or weary her into a forgiveness.

[Exit.]

Sharp. Methinks I long to see Bellmour come forth.

Enter Bellmour.

Setter. Talk of the devil—See where he comes.

Sharp. Hugging himself in his prosperous mischief—No real fanatic can look better pleased after a successful sermon of sedition.

Bellm. Sharper! fortify thy spleen: such a jest! Speak when thou art ready.

Sharp. Now, were I ill-natured, would I utterly disappoint thy mirth: hear thee tell thy mighty jest, with as much gravity as a bishop hears venereal causes in the spiritual.

spiritual court; not so much as wrinkle my face with one smile; but let thee look simply, and laugh by thyself.

Bellm. Pshaw, no; I have a better opinion of thy wit—Gad! I defy thee.—

Sharp. Were it not loss of time, you should make the experiment. But honest Setter, here, overheard you with Lucy, and has told me all.

Bellm. Nay then, I thank thee for not putting me out of countenance. But, to tell you something you don't know—I got an opportunity (after I had married them) of discovering the cheat to Silvia. She took it at first, as another woman would the like disappointment; but my promise to make her amends quickly with another husband, somewhat pacified her.

Sharp. But how the devil do you think to acquit yourself of your promise? Will you marry her yourself?

Bellm. I have no such intentions at present—Pr'ythee, wilt thou think a little for me? I am sure the ingenious Mr. Setter will assist.

Setter. O Lord, sir!

Bellm. I'll leave him with you, and go shift my habit.
[Exit.]

Enter Sir Joseph Wittoll and Bluffe.

Sharp. Heh! sure, fortune has sent this fool hither on purpose. Setter, stand close; seem not to observe them; and, hark—ye—[whispers.]

Bluffe. Fear him not—I am prepared for him now; and he shall find he might have safer roused a sleeping lion.

Sir J. Witt. Hush, hush: Don't you see him?

Bluffe. Shew him to me.—Where is he?

Sir J. Witt. Nay, don't speak so loud—I don't jest, as I did a little while ago—Look yonder—Egad, if he should hear the lion roar, he'd cudgel him into an ass, and his primitive braying. Don't you remember the story in Æsop's Fables, Bully? Egad, there are good morals to be picked out of Æsop's Fables, let me tell you that; and Reynard the Fox too.

Bluffe. Damn your morals!

Sir J. Witt. Pr'ythee, don't speak so loud.

Bluffe. Damn your morals! I must revenge the affront done to my honour. [in a low voice.]

Sir J. Witt. Ay; do, do, Captain if you think fitting—You may dispose of your own flesh as you think fitting, d'ye see—but, by the Lord Harry, I'll leave you. [stealing away upon his tip-toes.]

Bluffe. Prodigious! What, will you forsake your friend in extremity! You can't in honour refuse to carry him a challenge.

[almost whispering, and treading softly after him.]

Sir J. Witt. Pr'ythee, what do you see in my face, that looks as if I would carry a challenge? Honour is your province, Captain; take it—All the world know me to be a knight, and a man of worship.

Setter. I warrant you, sir; I'm instructed.

Sharp. Impossible! Araminta take a liking to a fool! [aloud.]

Setter. Her head runs on nothing else, nor she can talk of nothing else.

Sharp. I know she commended him all the while we were in the park; but, I thought it had been only to make Vainlove jealous—

Sir J. Witt. How's this? Good Bully, hold your breath, and let's hearken. Egad, this must be I.—

Sharp. Death! it can't be—An oaf, an ideot, a wit-tol.

Sir J. Witt. Ay; now it's out, 'tis I, my own individual person.

Sharp. A wretch that has flown for shelter to the lowest shrub of mankind, and seeks protection from a blasted coward.

Sir J. Witt. That's you, Bully Back.

[Bluffe frowns upon Sir Joseph.]

Sharp. She has given Vainlove her promise, to marry him before to-morrow morning—has she not? [to Setter.]

Setter. She has, sir;—and I have it in charge to attend her all this evening, in order to conduct her to the place appointed.

Sharp. Well, I'll go and inform your master; and do you press her to make all the haste imaginable. [Exit.]

Setter. Were I a rogue now, what a noble prize could I dispose

I dispose of! A goodly pinnace, richly laden, and to launch forth under my auspicious convoy. Twelve thousand pounds, and all her rigging; besides what lies concealed under hatches.—Ha! all this committed to my care!—Avaunt, temptation!—Setter, shew thyself a person of worth; be true to thy trust, and be reputed honest. Reputed honest! hum! is that all? ay: for to be honest is nothing; the reputation of it is all! Reputation! what have such poor rogues as I to do with reputation? 'tis above us; and for men of quality, they are above it; so that reputation is even as foolish a thing as honesty. And for my part, if I meet Sir Joseph with a purse of gold in his hand, I'll dispose of mine to the best advantage.

Sir J. Witt. Heh, heh, heh! here it is for you, i'faith, Mr. Setter. Nay, I'll take you at your word.
[chinking a purse.]

Setter. Sir Joseph and the captain too! undone, undone! I'm undone, my master's undone, my lady's undone, and all the business is undone.

Sir J. Witt. No, no, never fear, man, the lady's business shall be done. What!—Come, Mr. Setter, I have overheard all, and to speak is but loss of time; but, if there be occasion, let these worthy gentlemen intercede for me.
[gives him gold.]

Setter. O Lord, sir, what d'ye mean? corrupt my honesty!—They have indeed very persuading faces: But—

Sir J. Witt. 'Tis too little, there's more, man. There, take all—Now—

Setter. Well, Sir Joseph, you have such a winning way with you—

Sir J. Witt. And how, and how, good Setter, did the little rogue look, when she talked of Sir Joseph? did not her eyes twinkle, and her mouth water? did not she pull up her little bubbies? and—egad, I'm so overjoyed—and stroke down her belly? and then step aside to tie her garter, when she was thinking of her love? Hey, Setter!

Setter. Oh, yes, sir.

Sir

Sir J. Witt. How now, Bully? what, melancholy, because I'm in the lady's favour?—No matter, I'll make your peace—I know they were a little smart upon you—But, I warrant, I'll bring you into the lady's good graces.

Bluffe. Pshaw, I have petitions to show, from other-guests toys than she. Look here; these were sent me this morning—There, read. [shows letters.] That—That's a scrawl of quality. Here, here's from a countess too. Hum—No, hold—that's from a knight's wife, she sent it me by her husband—But here, both these are from persons of great quality.

Sir J. Witt. They are either from persons of great quality, or no quality at all, 'tis such a damn'd ugly hand. [while Sir Joseph reads, Bluffe whispers Setter.]

Setter. Captain, I would do any thing to serve you; but this is so difficult—

Bluffe. Not at all. Don't I know him?

Setter. You'll remember the conditions?—

Bluffe. I'll give it you under my hand—In the mean time, here's earnest. [gives him money.] Come, knight—I'm capitulating with Mr. Setter for you.

Sir J. Witt. Ah, honest Setter:—Sirrah, I'll give thee any thing but a night's lodging. [Exeunt.]

Enter Sharper tugging in Heartwell.

Sharp. Nay, pr'ythee leave railing, and come along with me; may be she mayn't be within. 'Tis but to yon corner-house.

Heart. Whither? whither? which corner house?

Sharp. Why, there; the two white posts.

Heart. And who would you visit there, say you? (Oons, how my heart akes!)

Sharp. Pshaw, thou'rt so troublesome and inquisitive—Why, I'll tell you; 'tis a young creature that Vain-love debauched, and has forsaken. Did you never hear Bellmour chide him about Silvia?

Heart. Death, and hell, and marriage! my wife!

[aside.]

Sharp. Why thou art as musty as a new-married man, that had found his wife knowing the first night.

Heart. Hell, and the devil! does he know it? But, hold

hold—If he should not, I were a fool to discover it.—I'll dissemble, and try him. [aside.]—Ha, ha, ha! why, Tom, is that such an occasion of melancholy? is it such an uncommon mischief?

Sharp. No, faith; I believe not.—Few women, but have their year of probation, before they are cloistered in the narrow joys of wedlock. But, pr'ythee come along with me, or I'll go and have the lady to myself. B'w'y, George. [going.]

Heart. O torture! how he racks and tears me!—Death! shall I own my shame, or wittingly let him go and whore my wife? No, that's insupportable—Oh, Sharper!

Sharp. How now?

Heart. Oh, I am—married!

Sharp. (Now hold, spleen) Married!

Heart. Certainly, irrecoverably married!

Sharp. Heaven forbid, man! How long?

Heart. Oh, an age, an age! I have been married these two hours.

Sharp. My old bachelor married! that were a jest! ha, ha, ha!

Heart. Death! d'ye mock me? Hark ye, if either you esteem my friendship, or your own safety—come not near that house—that corner-house—that hot brothel. Ask no questions. [Exit.]

Sharp. Mad by this light!

Thus grief still treads upon the heels of pleasure.
Married in haste, we may repent at leisure!

Enter Setter.

Setter. Some by experience find those words misplaced:

At leisure married, they repent in haste.

As I suppose, my Master Heartwell.

Sharp. Here again, my Mercury!

Setter. Sublimate, if you please, sir: I think my achievements do deserve the epithet—Mercury was a pimp too; but, though I blush to own it, at this time, I must confess I am somewhat fallen from the dignity of my function, and do condescend to be scandalously employed in the promotion of vulgar matrimony.

Sharp.

Sharp. As how, dear dexterous pimp?

Setter. Why, to be brief, for I have weighty affairs depending—Our stratagem succeeded as you intended.—Bluffe turns arrant traitor; bribes me, to make a private conveyance of the lady to him, and put a sham settlement upon Sir Joseph.

Sharp. O rogue! well, but I hope—

Setter. No, no; never fear me, fir—I privately informed the knight of the treachery; who has agreed seemingly to be cheated, that the captain may be so in reality.

Sharp. Where's the bride?

Setter. Shifting clothes for the purpose, at a friend's house of mine. Her's company coming; if you'll walk this way, fir, I'll tell you. [Exeunt.]

Enter Bellmour, Belinda, Araminta, and Vainlove.

Vain. Oh, 'twas frenzy all: cannot you forgive it?—Men in madness have a title to your pity. [to Araminta.]

Aram. Which they forfeit, when they are restored to their senses.

Vainl. I am not presuming beyond a pardon.

Aram. You, who could reproach me with one counterfeit, how insolent would a real pardon make you! But there's no need to forgive what is not worth my anger.

Bel. On my conscience, I could find in my heart to marry thee, purely to be rid of thee—At least, thou art so troublesome a lover, there's hopes thou'lt make a more than ordinary quiet husband. [to Bellmour.]

Bellm. Say you so?—Is that a maxim among you?

Bel. Yes: you fluttering men of the mode have made marriage a mere French dish.

Bellm. I hope there's no French sauce! [aside.]

Bel. You are so curious in the preparation, that is, your courtship, one would think you meant a noble entertainment—But, when we come to feed, 'tis all froth, and poor, but in shew. Nay, often, only remains, which have been, I know not how many times, warmed for other company, and at last served up cold to the wife.

Bellm. That were a miserable wretch indeed, who could not afford one warm dish for the wife of his bosom!

son!—But you timorous virgins form a dreadful chimæra of a husband, as of a creature contrary to that soft, humble, pliant, easy thing, a lover; so guess at plagues in matrimony, in opposition to the pleasures of courtship. Alas! courtship to marriage, is but as the music in the play-house, till the curtain is drawn; but, that once up, then opens the scene of pleasure.

Bel. Oh, foh!—no; rather, courtship to marriage, is as a very witty prologue to a very dull play.

Enter Sharper.

Sharp. Hift—Bellmour: if you'll bring the ladies, make haste to Silvia's lodgings, before Heartwell has fretted himself out of breath.—

Bel. You have an opportunity now, madam, to revenge yourself upon Heartwell, for affronting your squirrel. [to Belinda.

Bel. O the filthy rude beast!

Aram. 'Tis a lasting quarrel: I think, he has never been at our house since.

Bellm. But give yourselves the trouble to walk to that corner-house, and I'll tell you by the way what may divert and surprise you. [Exit.

S C E N E, Silvia's lodgings.

Enter Heartwell and Boy.

Heart. Gone forth, say you, with her maid!

Boy. There was a man too, that fetched them out—Setter, I think they called him.

Heart. Soh!—That precious pimp too!—Damn'd, damn'd strumpet! could she not contain herself on her wedding day? not hold out till night? O cursed state! how wide we err, when, apprehensive of the load of life,

We hope to find

That help which nature meant in woman-kind,

To man that supplemental self design'd;

But proves a burning caustic when applied:

And Adam, sure, could with more ease abide

The bone when broken, than when made a bride.

Enter

Enter Bellmour, Belinda, Vainlove, and Araminta.

Bellm. Now George, what, rhyming! I thought the chimes of verse were past, when once the doleful marriage knell was rung.

Heart. Shame and confusion! I am exposed.

[Vainlove and Araminta talk apart.]

Bel. Joy, joy, Mr. Bridegroom; I give you joy, fir.

Heart. 'Tis not in thy nature to give me joy—A woman can as soon give immortality.

Bel. Ha, ha, ha! O Gad! men grow such clowns when they are married—

Bellm. That they are fit for no company but their wives.

Bel. Nor for them neither, in a little time—I swear, at the month's end, you shall hardly find a married man, that will do a civil thing to his wife, or say a civil thing to any body else. How he looks already! Ha, ha, ha!

Bellm. Ha, ha, ha!

Heart. Death! am I made your laughing-stock? For you, fir, I shall find a time; but take off your wasp here, or the clown may grow boisterous; I have a fly-flap.

Bel. You have occasion for't; your wife has been blown upon.

Bellm. That's home.

Heart. Not fiends or furies could have added to my vexation, or any thing but another woman!—You've racked my patience; be gone, or by—

Bellm. Hold, hold. What the devil, thou wilt not draw upon a woman!

Vainl. What's the matter?

Aram. Bless me! what have you done to him?

Bel. Only touched a galled beast till he winched.

Vainl. Bellmour, give it over; you vex him too much; 'tis all serious to him.

Bel. Nay, I swear, I begin to pity him, myself.

Heart. Damn your pity!—But let me be calm a little.—How have I deserved this of you? any of you? Sir, have have I impaired the honour of your house, promised your sister marriage, and whored her? wherein have I injured you? did I bring a physician to your father when he lay expiring, and endeavour to prolong his life, and you one and twenty? madam, have I had an opportunity with you and baulked it? did you ever offer me the favour, that I refused it? or—

Bel. Oh foh! what does the filthy fellow mean? Lard! let me be gone.

Aram. Hang me, if I pity you; you are right enough served.

Bellm. This is a little scurrilous though.

Vainl. Nay, 'tis a sore of your own scratching—Well, George—

Heart. You are the principal cause of all my present ills. If Silvia had not been your mistress, my wife might have been honest.

Vainl. And if Silvia had not been your wife, my mistress might have been just.—There, we are even—But have a good heart; I heard of your misfortune, and came to your relief.

Heart. When execution's over, you offer a reprieve.

Vainl. What would you give?

Heart. Oh! any thing, every thing, a leg or two, or an arm; nay, I would be divorced from my virility, to be divorced from my wife.

Enter Sharper.

Vainl. Faith, that's a sure way—But here's one can sell you freedom better cheap.

Sharp. Vainlove, I have been a kind of a godfather to you, yonder. I have promised and vowed some things in your name, which I think you are bound to perform.

Vainl. No signing to a blank, friend.

Sharp. No, I'll deal fairly with you—'Tis a full and free discharge to Sir Joseph Wittoll and Captain Bluffe; for all injuries whatsoever, done unto you by them, until the present date hereof—How say you?

Vainl. Agreed.

Sharp.

Sharp. Then, let me beg these ladies to wear their masks a moment.—Come in, gentlemen and ladies.

Heart. What the devil's all this to me?

Vainl. Patience.

Enter Sir Joseph Wittoll, Bluffe, Silvia, Lucy, and Setter.

Bluffe. All injuries whatsoever, Mr. Sharper.

Sir J. Witt. Ay, ay, whatsoever, Captain: stick to that whatsoever.

Sharp. 'Tis done, these gentlemen are witnesses to the general release.

Vainl. Ay, ay, to this instant moment—I have passed an act of oblivion.

Bluffe. 'Tis very generous, sir, since I needs must own—

Sir J. Witt. No, no, Captain, you need not own; heh, heh, heh! 'Tis I must own—

Bluffe.—That you are over-reached too, ha, ha, ha, only a little art-military used—only undermined, or so, as shall appear by the fair Araminta my wife's permission.—Oh, the devil, cheated at last! [Lucy unmasks.]

Sir J. Witt. Only a little art-military trick, captain, only countermined, or so.—Mr. Vainlove, I suppose you know whom I have got now—but all's forgiven!

Vainl. I know whom you have not got; pray, ladies, convince him. [Aram. and Belin. unmask.]

Sir J. Witt. Ah! O Lord! my heart akes—Ah! Setter, a rogue of all sides!

Sharp. Sir Joseph, you had better have pre-engaged this gentleman's pardon: for though Vainlove be so generous to forgive the loss of his mistress—I know not how Heartwell may take the loss of his wife.

[Silvia unmasks.]

Heart. My wife! by this light, 'tis she, the very cockatrice!—Oh Sharper! let me embrace thee—But art thou sure she is really married to him?

Setter. Really and lawfully married, I am witness.

Sharp. Bellmour will unriddle to you.

[Heartwell goes to Bellmour.]

Sir

Sir J. Witt. Pray, madam, who are you? For, I find, you and I are like to be better acquainted.

Silvia. The worst of me is, that I am your wife—

Sharp. Come, Sir Joseph, your fortune is not so bad as you fear—A fine lady, and a lady of very good quality.

Sir J. Witt. Thanks to my knighthood, she's a lady—

Vainl. That deserves a fool with a better title—Pray use her as my relation, or you shall hear on't.

Bluffe. What, are you a woman of quality too, spouse?

Setter. And my relation; pray let her be respected accordingly.—Well, honest Lucy, fare thee well—I think, you and I have been play-fellows, off and on, any time this seven years,

Lucy. Hold your prating—I'm thinking what vocation I shall follow while my spouse is planting laurels in the wars.

Bluffe. No more wars, spouse, no more wars—While I plant laurels for my head abroad, I may find the branches sprout at home.

Heart. Bellmour, I approve thy mirth, and thank thee—And I cannot in gratitude (for I see which way thou art going) see thee fall into the same snare out of which thou hast delivered me.

Bellm. I thank thee, George, for thy good intention—But there is a fatality in marriage—For I find I'm resolute.

Heart. Then good counsel will be thrown away upon you—For my part, I have once escaped—and when I wed again, may she be—ugly, as an old bawd!

Vainl. Ill-natured, as an old maid—

Bellm. Wanton, as a young widow—

Sharp. And jealous, as a barren wife.

Heart. Agreed.

Bellm. Well; 'midst of these dreadful denunciations, and notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance.

Bcl. Prisoner, make much of your fetters.

Bellm.

Bellm. Frank, will you keep us in countenance?

Vainl. May I presume to hope so great a blessing?

Aram. We had better take the advantage of a little of our friends experience first.

Bellm. On my conscience, she dares not consent, for fear he should recant! [aside.—Well, we shall have your company to church in the morning—May be it may get you an appetite, to see us fall-to before you. Setter, did not you tell me?—

Setter. They're at the door: I'll call them in.

A D A N C E.

Bellm. Now set we forward on a journey for life—
Come, take your fellow-travellers. Old George, I'm sorry to see thee still plod on alone.

Heart. With gaudy plumes and gingling bells made proud,

The youthful beast sets forth, and neighs aloud.

A morning sun his tinsel'd harness gilds,

And the first stage a down-hill green-sward yields.

But, Oh!—

What rugged ways attend the noon of life!

(Our sun declines) and with what anxious strife,

What pain, we tug that galling load, a wife!

All courfers the first heat with vigour run;

But 'tis with whip and spur the race is won.

[Exeunt omnes.]

EPILOGUE

Spoken by Mrs. BARRY.

*AS a rash girl, who will all hazards run,
 And be enjoy'd, tho' sure to be undone;
 Soon as her curiosity is over,
 Would give the world she could her toy recover:
 So fares it with our poet; and I'm sent
 To tell you, he already does repent:
 Would you were all as forward, to keep Lent!
 Now the deed's done, the giddy thing has leisure
 To think o'th' sting, that's in the tail of pleasure.
 Methinks I hear him in consideration!
 What will the world say? where's my reputation?
 Now that's at stake—No, fool; 'tis out of fashion.
 If loss of that should follow want of wit,
 How many undone men were in the pit!
 Why that's some comfort to an author's fears,
 If he's an ass, he will be tried by's peers.
 But hold—I am exceeding my commission;
 My business here was, humbly to petition:
 But we're so us'd to rail on these occasions,
 I could not help one trial of your patience:
 For 'tis our way (you know) for fear o'th' worst,
 To be before-hand still, and cry fool first.
 How say you, Sparks? how do you stand affected?
 I swear, young Bayes within is so dejected,
 'T would grieve your hearts to see him; shall I call him?
 But then you cruel critics would so maul him!
 Yet, may be, you'll encourage a beginner;
 But how?—Just as the devil does a sinner.
 Women and wits are us'd e'en much at one,
 You gain your ends, and damn them when you've done!*

DOUBLEDAY

COMEDY

To the Right Honourable

CHARLES MONTAGUE,

One of the LORDS of the TREASURY.

S I R,

I heartily wish this play were as perfect as I intended it, that it might be more worthy your acceptance; and that my dedication of it to you might be more becoming that honour and esteem which I, with every body who is so fortunate as to know you, have for you. It had your countenance when yet unknown; and, now it is made public, wants your protection.

I would not have any body imagine that I think this play without its faults, for I am conscious of several. I confess I designed (whatever vanity or ambition occasioned that design) to have written a true and regular comedy: but I found it an undertaking which put me in mind of—Sudet multum, frustraue laboret ausus idem. And now, to make amends for the vanity of such a design, I do confess both the attempt and the performance imperfect. Yet I must take the boldness to say, I have not miscarried in the whole; for the mechanical part of it is regular. That I may say with as little vanity, as a builder may say he has built a house according to the model laid down before him; or a gardener that he has set his flowers in a knot of such or such a figure. I designed the moral first, and to that moral I invented the fable, and do not know that I have borrowed one hint of it any where. I made the plot as strong as I could, because it was single; and I made it single, because I would avoid confusion, and was resolved to preserve the three Unities of the Drama. Sir, this discourse is very impertinent to you, whose judgment much better can discern the faults, than I can excuse them; and whose good-nature, like that of a lover, will find out those hidden beauties (if there are any such) which it would be great immodesty for me to discover. I think I do not speak improperly, when I call you a lover of Poetry; for it is very well known she has been a very kind mistress to you; she has not denied you the last favour; and she has been fruitful to you in a most beautiful issue—If I break off abruptly here, I hope every body will understand that it is to avoid a commendation, which, as it is your due, would be most easy for me to pay, and too troublesome for you to receive.

I have, since the acting of this play, hearkened after the objections which have been made to it; for I was conscious where a true critic might have put me upon my defence. I was prepared for the attack; and am pretty confident I could have vindicated some parts, and excused others; and where there were any plain miscarriages, I would most ingenuously have confessed them. But I have not heard any thing said sufficient to provoke an answer. That which looks most like an objection, does not relate in particular to this play, but to all or most that ever have been written; and that is, SOLILOQUY. Therefore I will answer it, not only for my own sake, but to save others the trouble, to whom it may hereafter be objected.

I grant, that for a man to talk to himself, appears absurd and unnatural; and indeed it is so in most cases: but the circumstances which may attend the occasion, make great alteration. It oftentimes happens to a man, to have designs which require him to himself, and in their nature cannot admit of a confidant. Such, for certain, is all villainy; and other less mischievous intentions may be very improper to be communicated to a second person. In such a case, therefore, the audience must observe, whether the person upon the stage takes any notice of them at all, or no: for, if he supposes any one

one to be by, when he talks to himself, it is monstrous and ridiculous to the last degree. Nay, not only in this case, but in any part of a play, if there is expressed any knowledge of an audience, it is insufferable. But otherwise, when a man in soliloquy reasons with himself, and pro's and con's, and weighs all his designs; we ought not to imagine that this man either talks to us, or to himself; he is only thinking, and thinking such matter as were inexcusable folly in him to speak. But, because we are concealed spectators of the plot in agitation, and the Poet finds it necessary to let us know the whole mystery of his contrivance, he is willing to inform us of this person's thoughts; and to that end is forced to make use of the expedient of speech, no other better way being yet invented for the communication of thought.

Another very wrong objection has been made by some, who have not taken leisure to distinguish the characters. The hero of the play, as they are pleased to call him (meaning Mellefont), is a gull, and made a fool, and cheated. Is every man a gull and a fool, that is deceived? At that rate, I am afraid, the two classes of men will be reduced to one, and the knaves themselves be at a loss to justify their title. But, if an open-hearted honest man, who has an entire confidence in one whom he takes to be his friend, and whom he has obliged to be so; and who (to confirm him in his opinion) in all appearance, and upon several trials, has been so: If this man be deceived by the treachery of the other; must he of necessity commence fool immediately, only because the other has proved a villain? Ay, but there was caution given to Mellefont, in the first act, by his friend Careless. Of what nature was that caution? only to give the audience some light into the character of Maskwell, before his appearance; and not to convince Mellefont of his treachery; for that was more than Careless was then able to do: He never knew Maskwell guilty of any villainy; he was only a sort of man which he did not like. As for his suspecting his familiarity with my Lady Touchwood; let them examine the answer that Mellefont makes him, and compare pare it with the conduct of Maskwell's character through the play.

I would beg them again to look into the character of Maskwell, before they accuse Mellefont of weakness for being deceived by him. For, upon summing up the inquiry into this objection, it may be found they have mistaken cunning in one character, for folly in another.

But there is one thing, at which I am more concerned than all the false criticisms that are made upon me; and that is, some of the ladies are offended. I am heartily sorry for it, for I declare I would rather disoblige all the critics in the world, than one of the fair sex. They are concerned that I have represented some women vicious and affected: How can I help it? It is the business of a comic poet, to paint the vices and follies of human-kind; and there are but two sexes, male and female, men and women, which have a title to humanity: and if I leave one half of them out, the work will be imperfect. I should be very glad of an opportunity to make my compliment to those ladies who are offended; but they can no more expect it in a comedy, than to be tickled by a surgeon when he is letting them blood. They who are virtuous or discreet, should not be offended; for such characters as these distinguish them, and make their beauties more shining and observed: And they who are of the other kind, may nevertheless pass for such, by seeming not to be displeased, or touched, with the satire of this Comedy. Thus have they also wrongfully accused me of doing them a prejudice, when I have in reality done them a service.

You will pardon me, Sir, for the freedom I take of making answers to other people, in an epistle which ought wholly to be sacred to you: But, since I intend the play to be so too, I hope I may take the more liberty of justifying it, where it is in the right.

I must now, Sir, declare to the world how kind you have been to my endeavours; for, in regard to what was well meant, you have excused what was ill performed. I beg you would continue the same method in your acceptance of this dedication. I know no other way of making a return to that humanity you shewed, in protecting an infant, but by enrolling it in your service, now that it is of age and come into the world. Therefore be pleased to accept of this, as an acknowledgment of the favour you have shewn me, and an earnest of the real service and gratitude of,

S I R,

Your Most Obligated,

Humble Servant,

WILLIAM CONGREVE.

TO MY DEAR FRIEND

Mr. CONGREVE:

On his COMEDY, called, THE DOUBLE DEALER.

*WELL, then; the promis'd hour is come at last:
 The present age of wit obscures the past:
 Strong were our fires; and, as they fought, they writ,
 Conquering with force of arms, and dint of wit:
 Theirs was the giant race, before the flood;
 And thus, when Charles return'd, our empire stood.
 Like Janus, be the stubborn soil manur'd,
 With rules of husbandry the rankness cur'd:
 Tam'd us to manners, when the stage was rude;
 And boisterous English wit, with art endued.
 Our age was cultivated thus at length;
 But what we gain'd in skill, we lost in strength.
 Our builders were with want of genius curst;
 The second temple was not like the first:
 Till you, the best Vitruvius, come at length;
 Our beauties equal; but excel our strength.
 Firm Doric pillars found your solid base:
 The fair Corinthian crowns the higher space;
 Thus all below is strength, and all above is grace.
 In easy dialogue is Fletcher's praise;
 He mov'd the mind, but had not power to raise.
 Great Jonson did by strength of judgment please:
 Yet, doubling Fletcher's force, he wants his ease.
 In differing talents both adorn'd their age;
 One for the study, t'other for the stage.
 But both to Congreve justly shall submit,
 One match'd in judgment, both o'er-match'd in wit.
 In him all beauties of this age we see;
 Etherege's courtship, Southern's purity;
 The satire, wit, and strength, of manly Wycherly.*

All

*All this in blooming youth you have achiev'd ;
 Nor are your foil'd contemporaries griev'd ;
 So much the sweetness of your manners move,
 We cannot envy you, because we love.
 Fabius might joy in Scipio, when he saw
 A beardless consul made against the law,
 And join his suffrage to the votes of Rome ;
 Though he with Hannibal was overcome.
 Thus old Romano bow'd to Raphael's fame ;
 And scholar to the youth he taught, became.
 Ob, that your brows my laurel had sustain'd !
 Well had I been depos'd, if you had reign'd !
 The father had descended for the son ;
 For only you are lineal to the throne.
 Thus when the state one Edward did depose ;
 A greater Edward in his room arose.
 But now, not I, but poetry is curs'd ;
 For Tom the second reigns like Tom the first.
 But let them not mistake my patron's part ;
 Nor call his charity their own desert:
 Yet this I prophesy ; Thou shalt be seen
 (Tho' with some short parenthesis between)
 High on the throne of wit ; and seated there,
 Not mine (that's little) but thy laurel wear.
 Thy first attempt an early promise made ;
 That early promise this has more than paid.
 So bold, yet so judiciously, you dare,
 That your least praise is, to be regular.
 Time, place, and action, may with pains be wrought,
 But genius must be born, and never can be taught.
 This is your portion ; this your native store ;
 Heaven, that but once was prodigal before,
 To Shakespeare gave as much ; she could not give him more !*

*Maintain your post : that's all the fame you need ;
 For 'tis impossible you should proceed.
 Already I am worn with cares and age ;
 And just abandoning th' ungrateful stage :
 Unprofitably kept at Heaven's expence,
 I live a rent-charge on his providence :*

*But you, whom every muse and grace adorn,
Whom I foresee to better fortune born,
Be kind to my remains; and oh, defend,
Against your judgment, your departed friend!
Let not th' insulting foe my fame pursue;
But shade those laurels which descend to you:
And take for tribute what these lines express;
You merit more; nor could my love do less.*

JOHN DRYDEN.

PROLOGUE.

P R O L O G U E.

Spoken by Mrs. BRACEGIRDLE.

MOOORS have this way (as story tells) to know
 Whether their brats are truly got, or no;
 Into the sea the new-born babe is thrown,
 There, as instinct directs, to swim, or drown.
 A barbarous device, to try if spouse
 Has kept religiously her nuptial vows.

Such are the trials, poets make of plays,
 Only they trust to more inconstant seas:
 So does our author, this his child commit
 To the tempestuous mercy of the pit,
 To know if it be truly born of wit.

Critics, awaunt! for you are fish of prey,
 And feed, like sharks, upon an infant play.
 Be every monster of the deep away!
 Let's a fair trial have, and a clear sea.

Let nature work, and do not damn too soon,
 For life will struggle long, ere it sink down;
 And will at least rise thrice, before it drown.
 Let us consider, had it been our fate,
 Thus hardly to be prov'd legitimate!
 I will not say, we'd all in danger been,
 Were each to suffer for his mother's sin:
 But, by my troth, I cannot avoid thinking,
 How nearly some good men might have 'scap'd sinking.
 But, Heav'n be prais'd! this custom is confin'd
 Alone to th' offspring of the muses kind:
 Our Christian cuckolds are more bent to pity;
 I know not one Moor husband in the city.
 I th' good man's arms the chopping bastard thrives,
 For he thinks all his own, that is his wife's.

Whatever fate is for this play design'd,
 The poet's sure he shall some comfort find:
 For, if his muse has play'd him false, the worst
 That can befall him is, to be divorc'd;
 You husbands, judge if that be to be curs'd!

THE DOUBLE DEALER.

A C T I.

SCENE, A gallery in Lord Touchwood's house, with chambers adjoining.

Enter Careless, crossing the stage, with his hat, gloves, and sword, in his hands; as just risen from table: Mellefont following him.

Mell. NED, Ned, whither so fast? what, turned fincher! why, you will not leave us?

Carel. Where are the women? I am weary of guzzling, and begin to think them the better company.

Mell. Then thy reason staggers, and thou'rt almost drunk.

Carel. No, faith, but your fools grow noisy—and if a man must endure the noise of words without sense, I think the women have more musical voices, and become nonsense better.

Mell. Why, they are at the end of the gallery; retired to their tea, and scandal; according to their ancient custom, after dinner.—But I made a pretence to follow you, because I had something to say to you in private, and I am not like to have many opportunities this evening.

Carel. And here is this coxcomb most critically come to interrupt you.

Enter Brisk.

Brisk. Boys, boys, lads, where are you? what, do you give ground? mortgage for a bottle! ha? Careless, less, this is your trick; you are always spoiling company by leaving it.

Carel. And thou art always spoiling company by coming into it.

Brisk. Pooh! ha, ha, ha! I know you envy me. Spite, proud spite, by the gods! and burning envy—I'll be judged by Mellefont here, who gives and takes raillery better, you or I. Pshaw, man, when I say you spoil company by leaving it, I mean you leave nobody for the company to laugh at. I think, there I was with you; ha, Mellefont?

Mell. On my word, Brisk, that was a home thrust; you have silenced him.

Brisk. Oh! my dear Mellefont, let me perish, if thou art not the soul of conversation, the very essence of wit, and spirit of wine!—The deuce take me, if there were three good things said, or one understood, since thy amputation from the body of our society.—He! I think that's pretty and metaphorical enough:—Egad, I could not have said it out of thy company—Careless, ha?

Carel. Hum, ay, what is it?

Brisk. O, mon cœur! what is it? Nay, Gad! I'll punish you, for want of apprehension: the deuce take me if I tell you!

Mell. No, no, hang him, he has no taste.—But, dear Brisk, excuse me, I have a little business.

Carel. Pr'ythee get thee gone; thou seest we are serious.

Mell. We'll come immediately, if you'll but go in, and keep up good-humour and sense in the company; pr'ythee do, they'll fall asleep else.

Brisk. Egad, so they will—Well I will, I will; Gad! you shall command me, from the Zenith to the Nadir—But the deuce take me if I say a good thing till you come—But pr'ythee, dear rogue, make haste, pr'ythee make haste, I shall burst else—And yonder's your uncle, my Lord Touchwood, swears he'll disinherit you, and Sir Paul Plyant threatens to disclaim you for a son-in-law, and my Lord Froth won't dance at your wedding to-morrow; nor, the deuce take me! I won't write your epithalamium—and see what a condition you're like to be brought to.

Mell. Well, I'll speak but three words, and follow you.

Brisk. Enough, enough; Careless, bring your apprehension along with you. [Exit.

Carel. Pert coxcomb!

Mell. Faith, it is a good-natured coxcomb, and has very entertaining follies—You must be more humane to him; at this juncture it will do me service.—I'll tell you, I would have mirth continued this day at any rate; though patience purchase folly, and attention be paid with noise. There are times when sense may be unreasonable, as well as truth. Pr'ythee do thou wear none to-day; but allow Brisk to have wit, that thou mayst seem a fool.

Carel. Why, how now? why this extravagant proposition?

Mell. O, I would have no room for serious design; for I am jealous of a plot. I would have noise and impertinence keep my Lady Touchwood's head from working; for hell is not more busy than her brain, nor contains more devils than that imaginations.

Carel. I thought your fear of her had been over—Is not to-morrow appointed for your marriage with Cynthia; and her father, Sir Paul Plyant, come to settle the writings this day, on purpose?

Mell. True: but you shall judge whether I have not reason to be alarmed. None besides you and Maskwell are acquainted with the secret of my aunt Touchwood's violent passion for me. Since my first refusal of her addresses, she has endeavoured to do me all ill offices with my uncle; yet has managed them with that subtilty, that to him they have borne the face of kindness; while her malice, like a dark lantern, only shone upon me, where it was directed. Still it gave me less perplexity to prevent the success of her displeasure, than to avoid the importunities of her love; and of two evils, I thought myself favoured in her aversion: but whether urged by her despair, and the short prospect of time she saw to accomplish her designs; whether the hopes

Hopes of revenge, or of her love, terminated in the view of this my marriage with Cynthia, I know not; but this morning she surpris'd me in my bed—

Carel. Was there ever such a fury? It is well nature has not put it into her sex's power to ravish!—Well, bless us! proceed. What followed?

Mell. What at first amazed me; for I looked to have seen her in all the transports of a flighted and revengeful woman. But when I expected thunder from her voice, and lightning in her eyes; I saw her melted into tears, and hushed into a sigh. It was long before either of us spoke; passion had tied her tongue, and amazement mine.—In short, the consequence was thus. She omitted nothing that the most violent love could urge, or tender words express: which when she saw had no effect, but still I pleaded honour and nearness of blood to my uncle; then came the storm I feared at first; for, starting from my bed-side like a fury, she flew to my sword, and with much ado I prevented her doing me or herself a mischief. Having disarmed her, in a gust of passion she left me, and in a resolution, confirmed by a thousand curses, not to close her eyes till they had seen my ruin.

Carel. Exquisite woman! But what the devil does she think thou hast no more sense, than to get an heir upon her body, to disinherit thyself? for, as I take it, this settlement upon you is, with a proviso that your uncle have no children.

Mell. It is so. Well, the service you are to do me will be a pleasure to yourself; I must get you to engage my Lady Plyant all this evening, that my pious aunt may not work her to her interest. And if you chance to secure her to yourself, you may incline her to mine. She is handsome, and knows it; is very silly, and thinks she has sense, and has an old fond husband.

Carel. I confess, a very fair foundation for a lover to build upon.

Mell. For my Lord Froth, he and his wife will be sufficiently taken up, with admiring one another, and Brisk's gallantry, as they call it. I'll observe my uncle myself; and Jack Maskwell has promised me, to watch my

my aunt narrowly, and give me notice upon any suspicion. As for Sir Paul, my wife father-in-law that is to be, my dear Cynthia has such a share in his fatherly fondness, he would scarce make her a moment uneasy to have her happy hereafter.

Carel. So, you have manned your works; but I wish you may not have the weakest guard, where the enemy is strongest.

Mell. Maskwell, you mean; pr'ythee why should you suspect him?

Carel. Faith, I cannot help it; you know I never liked him; I am a little superstitious in physiognomy.

Mell. He has obligations of gratitude, to bind him to me; his dependance upon my uncle is through my means.

Carel. Upon your aunt—you mean.

Mell. My aunt?

Carel. I'm mistaken if there be not a familiarity between them, you do not suspect—notwithstanding her passion for you.

Mell. Pooh, pooh! nothing in the world but his design to do me service; and he endeavours to be well in her esteem, that he may be able to effect it.

Carel. Well, I shall be glad to be mistaken; but your aunt's aversion in her revenge cannot be any way so effectually shown, as in bringing forth a child to disinherit you. She is handsome and cunning, and naturally wanton. Maskwell is flesh and blood at best, and opportunities between them are frequent. His affection to you, you have confessed, is grounded upon his interest; that you have transplanted; and, should it take root in my lady, I don't see what you can expect from the fruit.

Mell. I confess the consequence is visible, were your suspicions just.—But see, the company is broke up; let us meet them.

Enter Lord Touchwood, Lord Froth, Sir Paul Plyant, and Brisk.

Lord Touchw. Out upon't, nephew!—Leave your father-in-law and me, to maintain our ground against young people?

Mell.

Mell. I beg your lordship's pardon—We were just returning—

Sir P. Pl. Were you, son? Gadsbud! much better as it is—Good strange! I swear I'm almost tipsy—t'other bottle would have been too powerful for me—as sure as can be, it would.—We wanted your company. But Mr. Brisk—Where is he? I swear and vow, he's a most facetious person—and the best company—And, my Lord Froth, your lordship is so merry a man, he, he, he!

Lord Froth. O foy, Sir Paul! what do you mean? Merry! O barbarous! I'd as lieve you called me fool.

Sir P. Pl. Nay, I protest and vow now, it is true; when Mr. Brisk jokes, your lordship's laugh does so become you, he, he, he!

Lord Froth. Ridiculous! Sir Paul, you're strangely mistaken; I find champagne is powerful. I assure you, Sir Paul, I laugh at nobody's jest but my own, or a lady's; I assure you, Sir Paul.

Brisk. How? how, my lord? what, affront my wit? Let me perish, do I never say any thing worthy to be laughed at?

Lord Froth. O foy! don't misapprehend me, I don't say so, for I often smile at your conceptions. But there is nothing more unbecoming a man of quality, than to laugh; it is such a vulgar expression of the passion! Every body can laugh. Then especially to laugh at the jest of an inferior person, or when any body else of the same quality does not laugh with one—ridiculous! to be pleased with what pleases the crowd! Now, when I laugh, I always laugh alone.

Brisk. I suppose, that's because you laugh at your own jests, egad! ha, ha, ha!

Lord Froth. He, he! I swear, though, your raillery provokes me to a smile.

Brisk. Ay, my lord, it's a sign I hit you in the teeth, if you shewed them.

Lord Froth. He, he, he! I swear, that's so very pretty, I can't forbear.

Carel. I find a quibble bears more sway in your lordship's face, than a jest.

Lord.

Lord Touchw. Sir Paul, if you please, we'll retire to the ladies, and drink a dish of tea, to settle our heads.

Sir P. Pl. With all my heart.—Mr. Brisk, you'll come to us—or call me when you joke, I'll be ready to laugh incontinently.

[Exeunt Sir Paul Plyant and Lord Touchw.]

Mell. But does your Lordship never see comedies?

Lord Froth. O yes, sometimes—But I never laugh.

Mell. No!

Lord Froth. Oh, no—Never laugh indeed, Sir.

Carel. No! why what do you go there for?

Lord Froth. To distinguish myself from the commonalty, and mortify the poets; the fellows grow so conceited, when any of their foolish wit prevails upon the side-boxes.—I swear—he, he he! I have often constrained my inclinations to laugh—he he, he! to avoid giving them encouragement.

Mell. You are cruel to yourself, my Lord, as well as malicious to them.

Lord Froth. I confess I did myself some violence at first; but now, I think, I have conquered it.

Brisk. Let me perish, my Lord, but there is something very particular in the humour; 'tis true, it makes against wit, and I'm sorry for some friends of mine that write, but—egad, I love to be malicious.—Nay, deuce take me! there's wit in't too—and wit must be foiled by wit; cut a diamond with a diamond: no other way, egad.

Lord Froth. Oh! I thought you would not be long before you found out the wit.

Carel. Wit! In what? Where the devil's the wit, in not laughing when a man has a mind to't?

Brisk. O Lord! why, can't you find it out?—Why there 'tis, in the not laughing—Don't you apprehend me?—My Lord, Careless is a very honest fellow, but harkee—you understand me, somewhat heavy, a little shallow, or so.—Why I'll tell you now: suppose now you come up to me—Nay, pr'ythee, Careless, be instructed—Suppose, as I was saying, you come up to me, holding your sides, and laughing, as if you would—Well —Well—I look grave, and ask the cause of this immoderate mirth.—You laugh on still, and are not able to tell me—Still I look grave, not so much as smile.

Carel. Smile? no; what the devil should you smile at, when you suppose I can't tell you?

Brisk. Pshaw, pshaw, pr'ythee don't interrupt me.—But I tell you, you shall tell me—at last—but it shall be a great while first.

Carel. Well, but, pr'ythee don't let it be a great while, because I long to have it over.

Brisk. Well then, you tell me some good jest, or very witty thing, laughing all the while as if you were ready to die—and I hear it, and look thus.—Would not you be disappointed?

Carel. No; for, if it were a witty thing, I should not expect you to understand it.

Lord Froth. O foy! Mr. Careless, all the world allows Mr. Brisk to have wit; my wife says, he has a great deal; I hope you think her a judge.

Brisk. Pooh, my Lord, his voice goes for nothing.—I can't tell how to make him apprehend.—Take it t'other way. Suppose I say a witty thing to you—

Carel. Then I shall be disappointed indeed.

Mell. Let him alone, Brisk; he is obstinately bent not to be instructed.

Brisk. I'm sorry for him, the deuce take me!

Mell. Shall we go to the ladies, my Lord?

Lord Froth. With all my heart; methinks we are a solitude without them.

Mell. Or what say you to another bottle of champagne?

Lord Froth. O, for the universe, not a drop more I beseech you. Oh intemperate! I have a flushing in my face already. [takes out a pocket-glass, and looks in it.]

Brisk. Let me see, let me see, my Lord; I broke my glass, that was in the lid of my snuff-box. Hum! Deuce take me! I have encouraged a pimple here too. [takes the glass, and looks.]

Lord Froth. Then you must mortify him with a patch; my wife shall supply you. Come, gentlemen, allons; here is company coming. [Exeunt.]

Enter

Enter Lady Touchwood and Maskwell.

Lady Touchw. I will hear no more.—You are false and ungrateful; come, I know you're false.

Maskw. I have been frail, I confess, Madam, for your Ladyship's service.

Lady Touchw. That I should trust a man, whom I had known betray his friend!

Maskw. What friend have I betrayed? or to whom?

Lady Touchw. Your fond friend, Mellefont, and to me; can you deny it?

Maskw. I do not.

Lady Touchw. Have you not wronged my Lord, who has been a father to you in your wants, and given you being? Have you not wronged him in the highest manner, in his bed?

Maskw. With your Ladyship's help, and for your service, as I told you before. I can't deny that neither.—Any thing more, Madam?

Lady Touchw. More! audacious villain! O, what's more, is most my shame—Have you not dishonoured me?

Maskw. No, that I deny; for I never told in all my life; so that accusation's answered: on to the next.

Lady Touchw. Death! do you dally with my passion? Insolent devil! But have a care—provoke me not; for, by the eternal fire, you shall not escape my vengeance.—Calm villain! How unconcerned he stands, confessing treachery and ingratitude! Is there a vice more black?—O, I have excuses, thousands for my faults; fire in my temper, passions in my soul, apt to every provocation; oppressed at once with love and with despair. But a sedate, a thinking villain, whose black blood runs temperately bad, what excuse can clear?

Maskw. Will you be in temper, Madam? I would not talk not to be heard. I have been [she walks about disordered] a very great rogue for your sake, and you reproach me with it; I am ready to be a rogue still, to do you service; and you are flinging conscience and honour in my face, to rebate my inclinations. How am I to behave myself? You know I am your creature, my

my life and fortune in your power; to disoblige you, brings me certain ruin. Allow it, I would betray you; I would not be a traitor to myself. I do not pretend to honesty, because you know I am a rascal: But I would convince you, from the necessity of my being firm to you.

Lady Touchw. Necessity, impudence! Can no gratitude incline you? no obligations touch you? Have not my fortune, and my person, been subjected to your pleasure? Were you not in the nature of a servant, and have not I in effect made you lord of all, of me, and of my lord? Where is that humble love, the languishing, that adoration, which once was paid me, and everlastingly engaged?

Maskw. Fixt, rooted in my heart, whence nothing can remove them; yet you—

Lady Touchw. Yet, what yet?

Maskw. Nay, misconceive me not, Madam, when I say I have had a generous and a faithful passion, which you had never favoured, but through revenge and policy.

Lady Touchw. Ha!

Maskw. Look you, Madam, we are alone—Pray contain yourself, and hear me. You know you loved your nephew when I first sighed for you; I quickly found it; an argument that I loved; for, with that art you veiled your passion, it was imperceptible to all but jealous eyes. This discovery made me bold, I confess it; for by it, I thought you in my power. Your nephew's scorn of you added to my hopes; I watched the occasion, and took you, just repulsed by him, warm at once with love and indignation; your disposition, my arguments, and happy opportunity, accomplished my design; I prest the yielding minute, and was blest. How I have loved you since, words have not shewn; then how should words express?

Lady Touchw. Well, mollifying devil!—And have I not met your love with forward fire?

Maskw. Your zeal, I grant, was ardent, but misplaced; there was revenge in view; that woman's idol had defiled the temple of the god, and love was made a mock-a mock-worship.—A son and heir would have edged young Mellefont upon the brink of ruin, and left him none but you to catch at for prevention!

Lady Touchw. Again, provoke me! Do you wind me like a larum, only to rouse my own stilled soul for your diversion?—Confusion!

Maskw. Nay, Madam, I am gone, if you relapse.—What needs this? I say nothing but what you yourself, in open hours of love, have told me. Why should you deny it? Nay, how can you deny it? Is not all this present heat owing to the same fire? Do you not love him still? How have I this day offended you, but in not breaking off his match with Cynthia? which ere to-morrow shall be done—had you but patience.

Lady Touchw. How? what said you, Maskwell?—Another caprice, to unwind my temper?

Maskw. By heaven, no; I am your slave, the slave of all your pleasures; and will not rest till I have given you peace, would you suffer me.

Lady Touchw. O Maskwell! in vain I do disguise me from thee; thou knowest me, knowest the very inmost windings and recesses of my soul.—Oh Mellefont! I burn! Married to-morrow! Despair strikes me. Yet my soul knows I hate him too: Let him but once be mine, and next immediate ruin seize him.

Maskw. Compose yourself, you shall possess and ruin him too—Will that please you?

Lady Touchw. How, how? Thou dear, thou precious villain! how?

Maskw. You have already been tampering with my Lady Plyant.

Lady Touchw. I have: She is ready for any impression I think fit.

Maskw. She must be thoroughly persuaded, that Mellefont loves her.

Lady Touchw. She is so credulous that way naturally, and likes him so well, that she will believe it faster than I can persuade her. But I don't see what you can propose from such a trifling design; for her first conversing with Mellefont will convince her of the contrary.

Maskw.

Maskw. I know it—I don't depend upon it.—But it will prepare something else; and gain us leisure to lay a stronger plot: if I gain a little time, I shall not want contrivance.

*One minute gives invention to destroy,
What, to rebuild, will a whole age employ.*

[Exeunt.

End of the First Act.

A C T II.

Enter Lady Froth and Cynthia.

Cynth. I N D E E D, Madam! Is it possible your Ladyship could have been so much in love?

Lady Froth. I could not sleep one wink for three weeks together.

Cynth. Prodigious! I wonder, want of sleep, and so much love, and so much wit as your Ladyship has, did not turn your brain.

Lady Froth. O my dear Cynthia, you must not rally your friend.—But really, as you say, I wonder too.—But then I had a way—For, between you and I, I had whimsies and vapours, but I gave them vent.

Cynth. How pray, Madam?

Lady Froth. O, I writ, writ abundantly—Do you never write?

Cynth. Write, what?

Lady Froth. Songs, elegies, satires, encomiums, panegyrics, lampoons, plays, or heroic poems.

Cynth. O Lord! not I, Madam; I'm content to be a courteous reader.

Lady Froth. O inconsistent! In love, and not write! If my lord and I had been both of your temper, we had never come together.—O bless me! what a sad thing would that have been, if my Lord and I should never have met!

Cynth. Then neither my Lord nor you would ever have met with your match, on my conscience.

Lady Froth. On my conscience, no more we should; thou sayest right—for, sure, my Lord Froth is as fine a gen-gentleman, and as much a man of quality! Ah! nothing at all of the common air—I think I may say he wants nothing, but a blue ribbon and a star, to make him shine the very phosphorus of our hemisphere. Do you understand those two hard words? If you don't, I'll explain them to you.

Cynth. Yes, yes, madam, I'm not so ignorant—At least I won't own it, to be troubled with your instructions. [aside.]

Lady Froth. Nay, I beg your pardon! but, being derived from the Greek, I thought you might have escaped the etymology.—But I'm the more amazed, to find you a woman of letters, and not write! Bless me! how can Mellefont believe you love him?

Cynth. Why faith, madam, he that won't take my word, shall never have it under my hand.

Lady Froth. I vow, Mellefont is a pretty gentleman; but methinks he wants a manner.

Cynth. A manner! What is that, madam?

Lady Froth. Some distinguishing quality, as for example, the bel air or brillant of Mr. Brisk; the solemnity, yet complaisance, of my Lord; or something of his own that should look a little je-ne-sçay-quoy; he is too much a mediocrity, in my mind.

Cynth. He does not indeed affect either pertness or formality; for which I like him. Here he comes.

Lady Froth. And my lord with him: Pray observe the difference.

Enter Lord Froth, Mellefont, and Brisk.

Cynth. Impertinent creature! I could almost be angry with her now. [aside.]

Lady Froth. My lord, I have been telling Cynthia, how much I have been in love with you; I swear I have; I'm not ashamed to own it now. Ah! it makes my heart leap, I vow, I sigh when I think on it! My dear lord, ha, ha! do you remember, my lord?

[Squeezes him by the hand, looks kindly on him, sighs, and then laughs out.]

Lord Froth. Pleasant creature! perfectly well: ah! that look, ay, there it is; who could resist! 'twas so my heart was made a captive first, and ever since it has been in love with happy slavery.

Lady Froth. O that tongue, that dear deceitful tongue! that charming softness in your mien and your expression! And then your bow! Good my lord, bow as you did when I gave you my picture; here, suppose this my picture—[gives him a pocket-glass.] Pray mind my lord. Ah! he bows charmingly; nay, my lord, you shan't kiss it so much; I shall grow jealous, I vow now.

[he bows profoundly low, then kisses the glass.]

Lord Froth. I saw myself there, and kissed it for your sake.

Lady Froth. Ah! gallantry to the last degree!—Mr. Brisk, you're a judge; was ever any thing so well bred as my lord?

Brisk. Never any thing—but your ladyship, let me perish.

Lady Froth. O, prettily turned again! Let me die but you have a great deal of wit. Mr. Mellefont, don't you think Mr. Brisk has a world of wit?

Mell. O yes, madam.

Brisk. O dear! madam—

Lady Froth. An infinite deal!

Brisk. O heavens! madam—

Lady Froth. More wit than any body.

Brisk. I am everlastingly your humble servant, deuce take me! madam.

Lord Froth. Don't you think us a happy couple?

Cynth. I vow, my lord, I think you the happiest couple in the world; for you are not only happy in one another, and when you are together, but happy in yourselves, and by yourselves.

Lord Froth. I hope Mellefont will make a good husband too.

Cynth. 'Tis my interest to believe he will, my lord.

Lord Froth. Do you think he will love you as well as I do my wife? I'm afraid not.

Cynth. I believe he will love me better.

Lord Froth. Heavens! that can never be; but why do you think so?

Cynth.

Cynth. Because he has not so much reason to be fond of himself.

Lord Froth. O your humble servant for that, dear madam! Well, Mellefont, you will be a happy creature.

Mellefont. Ay, my lord, I shall have the same reason for my happiness that your lordship has—I shall think myself happy.

Lord Froth. Ah, that's all.

Brisk. [to Lady Froth.] Your ladyship is in the right: but egad, I'm wholly turned into satire. I confess I write but seldom, but when I do—keen iambics, egad! But my lord was telling me, your ladyship has made an essay toward an heroic poem.

Lady Froth. Did my lord tell you? Yes, I vow, and the subject is my lord's love to me. And what do you think I call it? I dare swear you won't guess—The Syllabus—ha, ha, ha!

Brisk. Because my lord's title's Froth, egad, ha, ha, ha! deuce take me, very a-propos, and surprising, ha, ha, ha!

Lady Froth. He! ay, is not it?—And then I call my lord Spumose; and myself, what do you think I call myself?

Brisk. Lastilla, may be—egad I cannot tell.

Lady Froth. Biddy, that's all; just my own name.

Brisk. Biddy! egad, very pretty.—Deuce take me, if your ladyship has not the art of surprising the most naturally in the world.—I hope you'll make me happy, in communicating the poem.

Lady Froth. O, you must be my confident, I must ask your advice.

Brisk. I'm your humble servant, let me perish—I presume your ladyship has read Bosu?

Lady Froth. O yes, and Rapin and Dacier upon Aristotle and Horace.—My lord, you must not be jealous, I'm communicating all to Mr. Brisk.

Lord Froth. No, no, I'll allow Mr. Brisk; have you nothing about you to shew him, my dear?

Lady Froth. Yes, I believe I have.—Mr. Brisk, come, will you go into the next room? and there I'll shew you what I have. [Exit Lady Froth and Brisk.]

Lord Froth. I'll walk a turn in the garden, and come to you. [Exit.]

Mell. You are thoughtful, Cynthia.

Cynth. I'm thinking, though marriage makes man and wife one flesh, it leaves them still two fools; and they become more conspicuous, by setting off one another.

Mell. That's only when two fools meet, and their follies are opposed.

Cynth. Nay, I have known two wits meet, and, by the opposition of their wit, render themselves as ridiculous as fools. 'Tis an odd game we're going to play at: What think you of drawing stakes, and giving over in time?

Mell. No, hang it, that's not endeavouring to win, because it is possible we may lose; since we have shuffled and cut, let us e'en turn up trump now.

Cynth. Then I find it is like cards—if either of us have a good hand, it is an accident of fortune.

Mell. No, marriage is rather like a game at bowls; fortune indeed makes the match, and the two nearest, and sometimes the two farthest are together; but the game depends intirely upon judgment.

Cynth. Still it is a game, and consequently one of us must be a loser.

Mell. Not at all; only a friendly trial of skill, and the winnings to be laid out in an entertainment.—What's here, the music?—Oh, my lord has promised the company a new song; we'll get them to give it us by the way. [musicians crossing the stage.] Pray let us have the favour of you, to practise the song, before the company hear it.

S O N G.

I.

*Cynthia frowns whene'er I woo her,
Yet she's wext if I give over;
Much she fears I should undo her,
But much more to lose her lover:
Thus, in doubting, she refuses;
And, not winning, thus she loses.*

Pr'ythee,

H.

*Pr'ythee, Cynthia, look behind you,
Age and wrinkles will o'ertake you;
Then too late desire will find you,
When the power must forsake you:
Think, O think, o' th' sad condition,
To be past, yet wish fruition!*

Mell. You shall have my thanks below.
[to the music; they go out.]

Enter Sir Paul and Lady Plyant.

Sir P. Pl. Gads bud! I am provoked into a fermentation, as my Lady Froth says; was ever the like read of in story?

Lady Pl. Sir Paul, have patience, let me alone to rattle him up.

Sir P. Pl. Pray your ladyship, give me leave to be angry—I'll rattle him up; I warrant you; I'll teach him with a certiorari.

Lady Pl. You teach him! I'll teach him myself, and make him blush for his dishonourable notions of Lady Plyant's rectitude; so pray, Sir Paul, leave him to me, and hold you contented.

Cynth. Bless me, what makes my father in such a passion?—I never saw him thus before.

Sir P. Pl. Hold yourself contented, my Lady Plyant.—I find passion coming upon me even to desperation, as the philosopher says, and I cannot submit as formerly; therefore give way.

Lady Pl. How now! will you be pleased to retire, and—

Sir P. Pl. No, marry, will I not be pleased; I am pleased to be angry, that's my pleasure at this time.

Mell. What can this mean?

Lady Pl. Gads my life, the man's distracted. Why how now? who are you? what am I? Slidikins, can't I govern you? what did I marry you for? am I not to be absolute and uncontrollable? is it fit a woman of my spirit and conduct should be contradicted in a matter of this concern?

Sir P. Pl. It concerns me, and only me.—Besides, I'm not to be governed at all times. When I am in tranquillity, my Lady Plyant shall command Sir Paul; but when I am provoked to fury, I cannot incorporate with patience, and reason.—As soon may tigers match with tigers, lambs with lambs, and “every creature” couple with its foe,” as the poet says.

Lady Pl. He’s hot-headed still! It is in vain to talk to you; but, remember I have a curtain lecture for you, you disobedient, headstrong brute!

Sir P. Pl. No, it is because I won’t be a brute, and have my head fortified, that I am thus exasperated.—But I will protect my honour—and yonder is the violator of my fame.

Lady Pl. ’Tis my honour that is concerned, and the violation was intended to me. Your honour! You have none but what is in my keeping, and I can dispose of it when I please—therefore don’t provoke me.

Sir P. Pl. Hum! Gads bud, she says true.—Well, my lady, march on, I will fight under you then: I am convinced, as far as passion will permit.

[Lady Plyant and Sir Paul come up to Mellefont.]

Lady Pl. Inhuman and treacherous—

Sir P. Pl. Thou serpent and first tempter of womankind!—

Cynth. Bless me! sir; madam; what mean you?

Sir P. Pl. Thy, Thy, come away, Thy; touch him not; come hither, girl; go not near him; there’s nothing but deceit about him; snakes are in his peruke, and the crocodile of Nilus is in his belly; he will eat thee up alive.

Lady Pl. Dishonourable, impudent creature!

Mell. For heaven’s sake, madam, to whom do you direct this language!

Lady Pl. Have I behaved myself with all the decorum and nicety, befitting the person of Sir Paul’s wife? have I preserved my honour as it were in a snow-house for these three years past? have I been white and un sullied even by Sir Paul himself?

Sir P. Pl. Nay, she has been an invincible wife, even to me, that’s the truth on’t.

Lady Pl. Have I, I say, preserved myself, like a fair sheet of paper, for you to make a blot upon?

Sir P. Pl. And she shall make a simile with any woman in England.

Mell.

Mell. I am so amazed, I know not what to say.

Sir P. Pl. Do you think my daughter, this pretty creature—Gads bud! she's a wife for a cherubin! do you think her fit for nothing but to be a stalking horse, to stand before you, while you take aim at my wife? Gads bud! I was never angry before in my life, and I'll never be appeased again.

Mell. Confusion! this is my aunt; such malice can be engendered no where else. [aside.]

Lady Pl. Sir Paul, take Cynthia from his sight; leave me to strike him with the remorse of his intended crime.

Cynth. Pray, sir, stay: hear him; I dare affirm he's innocent.

Sir P. Pl. Innocent! Why hark'ye, come hither Thy, hark'ye, I had it from his aunt, my sister Touchwood—Gads bud! he does not care a farthing for any thing of thee, but thy portion;—why he's in love with my wife; he would have tantalized thee, and made a cuckold of thy poor father—and that would certainly have broke my heart—I'm sure, if ever I should have horns, they would kill me; they would never come kindly; I should die of them, like a child that was cutting his teeth—I should, indeed, Thy—therefore come away; but Providence has prevented all; therefore come away, when I bid you.

Cynth. I must obey. [Exeunt Sir Paul and Cynthia.]

Lady Pl. O, such a thing! the impiety of it startles me—to wrong so good, so fair a creature, and one that loves you tenderly—'tis a barbarity of barbarities, and nothing could be guilty of it—

Mell. But the greatest villain imagination can form, I grant it; and next to the villainy of such a fact, is the villainy of aspersing me with the guilt. How? which way was I to wrong her? For yet I understand you no.

Lady Pl. Why, Gads my life, cousin Mellefont, you cannot be so peremptory as to deny it, when I tax you with it to your face; for, now Sir Paul's gone, you are coram nobis.

Mell. By heaven, I love her more than life, or—

Lady Pl. Fiddle, faddle, don't tell me of this and that, and every thing in the world, but give me mathematical demonstration; answer me directly—But I have not patience—Oh! the impiety of it, as I was saying, and the unparalleled wickedness! Merciful father! how could you think to reverse nature so, to make the daughter the means of procuring the mother?

Mell. The daughter to procure the mother?

Lady Pl. Ay, for though I am not Cynthia's own mother, I am her father's wife; and that's near enough to make it incest.

Mell. Incest? O my precious aunt, and the devil in conjunction! [aside.]

Lady Pl. O, reflect upon the horror of that, and then the guilt of deceiving every body; marrying the daughter, only to make a cuckold of the father; and then seducing me, debauching my purity, and perverting me from the road of virtue, in which I have trod thus long, and never made one trip, not one faux pas! O, consider it, what would you have to answer for, if you should provoke me to frailty? Alas! humanity is feeble, heaven knows! very feeble, and unable to support itself.

Mell. Where am I? is it day? and am I awake? madam—

Lady Pl. And nobody knows how circumstances may happen together.—To my thinking, now, I could resist the strongest temptation!—But yet, I know, 'tis impossible for me to know whether I could or not; there's no certainty in the things of this life.

Mell. Madam, pray give me leave to ask you one question—

Lady Pl. O Lord! ask me the question? I'll swear, I'll refuse it; I swear, I'll deny it—therefore don't ask me—nay you shan't ask me, I swear I'll deny it. O Gemini, you have brought all the blood into my face; I warrant, I am as red as a turkey-cock!—O fie, cousin Mellefont!

Mell. Nay, madam, hear me; I mean—

Lady

Lady Pl. Hear you? no, no; I'll deny you first, and hear you afterward. For one does not know how one's mind may change upon hearing—Hearing is one of the senses, and all the senses are fallible; I won't trust my honour, I assure you; my honour is infallible and uncomeatable.

Mell. For heaven's sake, madam—

Lady Pl. O, name it no more!—Bless me, how can you talk of heaven, and have so much wickedness in your heart? May be you don't think it a sin.—They say some of you gentlemen don't think it a sin.—May be it is no sin to them that don't think it so. Indeed, if I did not think it a sin—But still my honour, if it were no sin—But then, to marry my daughter, for the conveniency of frequent opportunities—I'll never consent to that—as sure as can be, I'll break the match.

Mell. Death and amazement!—Madam, upon my knees—

Lady Pl. Nay, nay, rise up; come, you shall see my good-nature. I know love is powerful, and nobody can help his passion: 'tis not your fault; nor, I swear, it is not mine.—How can I help it, if I have charms? and how can you help it, if you are made a captive? I swear, it is pity it should be a fault.—But my honour—well, but your honour too.—But the sin!—well, but the necessity. O Lord! here's somebody coming, I dare not stay. Well, you must consider of your crime; and strive as much as can be against it—strive, be sure—but don't be melancholic, don't despair—but never think that I'll grant you any thing; O Lord! no!—But be sure you lay aside all thoughts of the marriage; for, though I know you don't love Cynthia, only as a blind for your passion to me; yet it will make me jealous—O Lord! what did I say? jealous! no, no, I can't be jealous, for I must not love you—therefore don't hope—but don't despair neither—O, they're coming, I must fly. [Exit.]

Mell. (after a pause.) So then—spight of my care and foresight, I am caught, caught in my security.—Yes this was but a shallow artifice, unworthy of my Machiavillian aunt: there must be more behind; this is but the first flash, the priming of her engine; destruction follows hard, if not most presently prevented.

Enter Maskwell.

Maskwell, welcome; thy presence is a view of land, appearing to my shipwrecked hopes. The witch has raised the storm, and her ministers have done their work; you see the vessels are parted.

Maskw. I know it; I met Sir Paul towing away Cynthia. Come, trouble not your head, I'll join you together ere to-morrow morning, or drown between you in the attempt.

Mell. There's comfort in a hand stretched out, to one that's sinking, though ne'er so far off.

Maskw. No sinking, nor no danger.—Come, cheer up; why you don't know that, while I plead for you, your aunt has given me a retaining fee.—Nay, I am your greatest enemy, and she does but journey-work under me.

Mell. Ha! how's this?

Maskw. What d'ye think of my being employed in the execution of all her plots? Ha, ha, ha! by heaven, it's true; I have undertaken to break the match, I have undertaken to make your uncle disinheret you, to get you turned out of doors; and to—and to—Ha, ha, ha! I can't tell you for laughing—Oh, she has opened her heart to me—I am to turn you a grazing, and to—Ha, ha, ha! marry Cynthia myself; there's a plot for you.

Mell. Ha! I see, I see my rising sun! light breaks through clouds upon me, and I shall live in day.—O my Maskwell! how shall I thank or praise thee? thou hast outwitted woman.—But tell me, how could'st thou thus get into her confidence?—Ha! how? but was it her contrivance, to persuade my Lady Plyant to this extravagant belief?

Maskw. It was; and, to tell you the truth, I encouraged it for your diversion: though it made you a little uneasy for the present, yet the reflection of it must needs be entertaining.—I warrant, she was very violent at first.

Mell.

Mell. Ha, ha, ha! ay, ay, a very fury; but I was most afraid of her violence at last—If you had not come as you did, I don't know what she might have attempted.

Maskw. Ha, ha, ha! I know her temper.—Well, you must know then, that all my contrivances were but bubbles; till at last I pretended to have been long secretly in love with Cynthia—That did my business; that convinced your aunt, I might be trusted; since it was as much my interest as hers to break the match. Then, she thought my jealousy might qualify me to assist her in her revenge; and, in short, in that belief, told me the secrets of her heart. At length we made this agreement—If I accomplish her designs (as I told you before), she has engaged to put Cynthia, with all her fortune, into my power.

Mell. She is most gracious in her favour.—Well, and, dear Jack, how hast thou contrived?

Maskw. I would not have you stay to hear it now; for I don't know but she may come this way; I am to meet her anon; after that, I'll tell you the whole matter: be here in this gallery an hour hence; by that time, I imagine, our consultation may be over.

Mell. I will; till then, success attend thee! [Exit.]

Maskw. Till then, success will attend me; for, when I meet you, I meet the only obstacle to my fortune.—Cynthia, let thy beauty gild my crimes; and whatsoever I commit of treachery or deceit, shall be imputed to me as a merit!—Treachery! what treachery? Love cancels all the bonds of friendship, and sets men right upon their first foundations.—Duty to kings, piety to parents, gratitude to benefactors, and fidelity to friends, are different and particular ties: but the name of rival cuts them all asunder, and is a general acquittance.—Rival is equal; and love, like death, an universal leveller of mankind. Ha! but is there not such a thing as honesty? yes, and whosoever has it about him, bears an enemy in his breast: for your honest man, as I take it, is that nice, scrupulous, conscientious person, who will cheat nobody but himself; such another coxcomb, as your wise man, who is too hard for all the world.

and will be made a fool of by nobody, but himself! ha, ha, ha! Well, for wisdom and honesty, give me cunning and hypocrisy: oh, 'tis such a pleasure, to angle for fair-faced fools! then that hungry gudgeon, credulity, will bite at any thing!—Why, let me see, I have the same face, the same words and accents, when I speak what I do think; and when I speak what I do not think—the very same—and dear dissimulation is the only art not to be known from nature.

*Why will mankind be fools, and be deceiv'd?
And why are friends and lovers oaths believ'd;
When each, who searches strictly his own mind,
May so much fraud and power of baseness find?*

[Exit.

End of the Second Act.

A C T III.

Enter Lord Touchwood, and Lady Touchwood.

Lady Touchw. MY Lord, can you blame my brother Plyant, if he refuse his daughter upon this provocation? The contract's void by this unheard-of impiety.

Lord Touchw. I don't believe it true; he has better principles—Pho! 'tis nonsense. Come, come, I know my Lady Plyant has a large eye, and would center every thing in her own circle; 'tis not the first time she has mistaken respect for love, and made Sir Paul jealous of the civility of an undesigning person, the better to bespeak his security in her unfeigned pleasures.

Lady Touchw. You censure hardly, my lord; my sister's honour is very well known.

Lord Touchw. Yes, I believe, I know some that have been familiarly acquainted with it! This is a little trick, wrought by some pitiful contriver, envious of my nephew's merit.

Lady Touchw. Nay, my lord, it may be so, and I hope it will be found so: but that will require some time: for, in such a case as this, demonstration is necessary.

Lord

Lord Touchw. There should have been demonstration of the contrary too, before it had been believed.

Lady Touchw. So, I suppose, there was.

Lord Touchw. How? where? when?

Lady Touchw. That I can't tell; nay I don't say there was—I am willing to believe as favourably of my nephew as I can.

Lord Touchw. I don't know that! [half aside.]

Lady Touchw. How? don't you believe that, say you, my lord!

Lord Touchw. No, I don't say so—I confess, I am troubled, to find you so cold in his defence.

Lady Touchw. His defence! bless me, would you have me defend an ill thing?

Lord Touchw. You believe it then?

Lady Touchw. I don't know; I am very unwilling to speak my thoughts in any thing that may be to my cousin's disadvantage; besides, I find, my lord, you are prepared to receive an ill impression from any opinion of mine which is not consenting with your own. But, since I am like to be suspected in the end, and 'tis a pain any longer to dissemble, I own it to you; in short, I do believe it; nay, and can believe any thing worse, if it were laid to his charge—Don't ask me my reasons, my lord; for they are not fit to be told you.

Lord Touchw. I'm amazed; here must be something more than ordinary in this! [aside.—Not fit to be told me, madam? You can have no interests, wherein I am not concerned; and consequently the same reasons ought to be convincing to me, which create your satisfaction or disquiet.

Lady Touchw. But those which cause my disquiet, I am willing to have remote from your hearing.—Good my lord, don't press me.

Lord Touchw. Don't oblige me to press you.

Lady Touchw. Whatever it was, 'tis past; and that is better to be unknown, which cannot be prevented; therefore let me beg you to rest satisfied.

Lord Touchw. When you have told me, I will.

Lady Touchw. You won't.

Lord

110 THE DOUBLE DEALER.

Lord Touchw. By my life, my dear, I will.

Lady Touchw. What, if you can't?

Lord Touchw. How? then I must know, nay I will: no more trifling—I charge you, tell me—By all our mutual peace to come; upon your duty—

Lady Touchw. Nay, my lord, you need say no more, to make me lay my heart before you. But don't be thus transported; compose yourself. It is not of concern, to make you lose one minute's temper. 'Tis not indeed, my dear. Nay, by this kiss, you shan't be angry. O Lord! I wish I had not told you any thing.—Indeed, my lord, you have frightened me. Nay, look pleased; I'll tell you.

Lord Touchw. Well, well.

Lady Touchw. Nay, but will you be calm?—indeed it's nothing but—

Lord Touchw. But what?

Lady Touchw. But will you promise me not to be angry?—Nay you must—Not to be angry with Mellefont?—I dare swear, he's sorry—and were it to do again, would not—

Lord Touchw. Sorry, for what? Death! you rack me with delay.

Lady Touchw. Nay, no great matter; only—Well, I have your promise—Pho! why nothing, only your nephew had a mind to amuse himself sometimes with a little gallantry towards me. Nay, I can't think he meant any thing seriously; but methought it looked oddly.

Lord Touchw. Confusion and hell! what do I hear!

Lady Touchw. Or, may be, he thought he was not enough akin to me upon your account, and had a mind to create a nearer relation on his own; a lover you know, my lord—Ha, ha, ha! Well, but that's all—Now you have it: well, remember your promise, my lord; and don't take any notice of it to him.

Lord Touchw. No, no, no—Damnation!

Lady Touchw. Nay, I swear you must not—A little harmless mirth—only misplaced, that's all—But, if it were more, 'tis over now, and all is well. For my part, part, I have forgot it; and so has he, I hope—for I have not heard any thing from him these two days.

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 215

Lord Touchw. These two days! is it so fresh? Unnatural villain!—Death! I'll have him stript and turned naked out of my doors this moment, and let him rot and perish—Incestuous brute!

Lady Touchw. O, for heaven's sake, my lord, you'll ruin me if you take such public notice of it; it will be a town talk. Consider your own and my honour—nay, I told you you would not be satisfied when you knew it.

Lord Touchw. Before I've done, I will be satisfied. Ungrateful monster! how long—

Lady Touchw. Lord, I don't know: I wish my lips had grown together when I told you—Almost a twelve-month—Nay, I won't tell you any more, till you are yourself. Pray, my lord, don't let the company see you in this disorder—Yet I confess I can't blame you; for I think I was never so surprised in my life.—Who would have thought my nephew could have so misconstrued my kindness?—But will you go into your closet, and recover your temper? I'll make an excuse of sudden business to the company, and come to you. Pray, good dear my lord, let me beg you do now: I'll come immediately, and tell you all—will you, my lord?

Lord Touchw. I will—I am mute with wonder.

Lady Touchw. Well, but go now, here's somebody coming.

Lord Touchw. Well, I go—you won't stay, for I would hear more of this. [Exit.

Lady Touchw. I follow instantly—So!

Enter Maskwell.

Maskw. This was a master-piece, and did not need my help—though I stood ready for a cue, to come in and confirm all, had there been occasion.

Lady Touchw. Have you seen Mellefont?

Maskw. I have; and am to meet him here about this time.

Lady Touchw. How does he bear his disappointment?

Maskw.

THE DOUBLE DEALER.

Maskw. Secure in my assistance, he seemed not much afflicted; but rather laughed at the shallow artifice, which so little time must of necessity discover. Yet he is apprehensive of some further design of yours, and has engaged me to watch you. I believe he will hardly be able to prevent your plot; yet I would have you use caution and expedition.

Lady Touchw. Expedition indeed; for all we do, must be performed in the remaining part of this evening, and before the company break up; lest my lord should cool, and have an opportunity to talk with him privately.—My lord must not see him again.

Maskw. By no means; therefore you must aggravate my lord's displeasure to a degree that will admit of no conference with him.—What think you of mentioning me?

Lady Touchw. How?

Maskw. To my lord, as having been privy to Mellefont's design upon you, but still using my utmost endeavours to dissuade him; though my friendship and love to him has made me conceal it; yet you may say, I threatened, the next time he attempted anything of that kind, to discover it to my lord.

Lady Touchw. To what end is this?

Maskw. It will confirm my lord's opinion of my honour and honesty, and create in him a new confidence in me, which (should this design miscarry) will be necessary to the forming another plot that I have in my head—to cheat you, as well as the rest! [aside.]

Lady Touchw. I'll do it—I'll tell him, you hindered him once from forcing me.

Maskw. Excellent! Your ladyship has a most improving fancy. You had best go to my lord, keep him as long as you can in his closet, and I doubt not but you will mould him to what you please; your guests are so engaged in their own follies and intrigues, they'll miss neither of you.

Lady Touchw. When shall we meet?—At eight this evening, in my chamber; there rejoice at our success, and toy away an hour in mirth.

Maskw.

Maskw. I will not fail. [Exit Lady Touchw.]
 I know what she means by toying away an hour well enough! Pox, I have lost all appetite to her; yet she's a fine woman, and I loved her once. But I don't know, since I have been in a great measure kept by her, the case is altered; what was my pleasure, is become my duty: and I have as little stomach to her now as if I were her husband. Should she smother my design upon Cynthia, I were in a fine pickle. She has a damned penetrating head, and knows how to interpret a coldness the right way; therefore I must dissemble ardour and ecstacy, that's resolved. How easily and pleasantly is that dissembled before fruition! Pox on't, that a man can't drink without quenching his thirst! Ha! yonder comes Mellefont thoughtful. Let me think—Meet her at eight—hum—Ha! by heaven, I have it—If I can speak to my lord before—Was it my brain, or providence? no matter which—I will deceive them all, and yet secure myself: 'twas a lucky thought! Well, this double-dealing is a jewel.—Here he comes: now for me!

[Maskwell pretending not to see him; walks by him, and speaks as it were to himself.]

Enter Mellefont, musing.

Maskw. Mercy on us! what will the wickedness of this world come to?

Mell. How now, Jack? What, so full of contemplation, that you run over!

Maskw. I'm glad you're come, for I could not contain myself any longer: and was just going to give vent to a secret, which nobody but you ought to drink down.—Your aunt's just gone from hence.

Mell. And having trusted thee with the secrets of her soul, thou art villainously bent to discover them all to me, ha?

Maskw. I'm afraid my frailty leans that way—but I don't know whether I can in honour discover them all.

Mell. All, all, man? what! you may in honour betray tray her as far as she betrays herself. No tragical design upon my person, I hope?

114 THE DOUBLE DEALER.

Maskw. No, but it is a comical design upon mine.

Mell. What dost thou mean?

Maskw. Listen, and be dumb; we have been bargaining about the rate of your ruin—

Mell. Like any two guardians to an orphan heiress—
Well.

Maskw. And whereas pleasure is generally paid with mischief, what mischief I do is to be paid with pleasure.

Mell. So, when you've swallowed the potion, you sweeten your mouth with a plum.

Maskw. You are merry, sir; but I shall probe your constitution. In short, the price of your banishment is to be paid with the person of—

Mell. Of Cynthia, and her fortune—Why, you forget; you told me this before.

Maskw. No, no—So far you are right; and I am, as an earnest of that bargain, to have full and free possession of the person of—your aunt.

Mell. Ha!—Pho, you trifle.

Maskw. By this light, I'm serious; all raillery apart—I knew 'twould stun you. This evening, at eight, she will receive me in her bed-chamber.

Mell. Hell and the devil! is she abandoned of all grace?—Why the woman is possess'd—

Maskw. Well, will you go in my stead?

Mell. By heaven, into a hot furnace sooner.

Maskw. No, you would not—It would not be so convenient, as I can order matters.

Mell. What d'ye mean?

Maskw. Mean I not to disappoint the lady, I assure you.—Ha, ha, ha! how gravely he looks!—Come, come, I won't perplex you. 'Tis the only thing that fortune could have contrived, to make me capable of serving you, either to my inclination, or your own necessity.

Mell. How, how, for heaven's sake, dear Maskwell?

Maskw. Why thus—I'll go according to appointment;

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 115

ment; you shall have notice, at the critical minute, to come and surprise your aunt and me together; counterfeit a rage against me, and I'll make my escape through the private passage from her chamber, which I'll take care to leave open: 'twill be hard, if then you can't bring her to any conditions; for this discovery will disarm her of all defence, and leave her entirely at your mercy; nay, she must ever after be in awe of you.

Mell. Let me adore thee, my better genius! By heaven, I think it is not in the power of fate to disappoint my hopes—My hopes? my certainty.

Maskw. Well, I'll meet you here, within a quarter of eight, and give you notice. [Exit.]

Mell. Good fortune ever go along with thee!

Enter Careless.

Careless. Mellefont, get out o'th' way; my Lady Plyant is coming, and I shall never succeed while thou art in sight—though she begins to tack about; but I made love a great while to no purpose.

Mell. Why, what's the matter? She's convinced that I don't care for her.

Careless. I cannot get an answer from her, that does not begin with her honour, or her virtue, her religion, or some such cant. Then she has told me the whole history of Sir Paul's nine years courtship; how he has lain for whole nights together upon the stairs, before her chamber-door; and that the first favour he received from her, was a piece of an old scarlet petticoat for a stomacher; which, since the day of his marriage, he has, out of a piece of gallantry, converted into a night-cap, and wears it still with much solemnity on his anniversary wedding night.

Mell. That I have seen, with the ceremony thereunto belonging—for on that night he creeps in at the bed's feet like a gulled Bassa that has married a relation of the Grand Signior; and that night he has his arms at liberty. Did not she tell you at what a distance she keeps him? He has confessed to me, that but at some certain times—that is, I suppose, when she apprehends being with child—he never has the privilege of using the the familiarity of a husband with a wife. He was once given to scrambling with his hands, and sprawling in his sleep; and ever since she has him swaddled up in blankets, and his hands and feet swathed down, and so put to bed; and there he lies, with a great beard, like a Russian bear upon a drift of snow. You are very great with him; I wonder he never told you his grievances; he will, I warrant you.

Carel. Excessively foolish!—But that which gives me most hopes of her, is her telling me of the many temptations she has resisted.

Mell. Nay, then you have her; for a woman's bragging to a man that she has overcome temptations, is an argument that they were weakly offered, and a challenge to him to engage her more irresistibly. 'Tis only an enhancing the price of the commodity, by telling you how many customers have underbid her.

Carel. Nay, I don't despair—But still she has a grudging to you—I talked to her t'other night at my Lord Froth's masquerade, when I'm satisfied she knew me, and I had no reason to complain of my reception; but I find women are not the same bare-faced and in masks—and a vizor disguises their inclinations as much as their faces.

Mell. 'Tis a mistake, for women may most properly be said to be unmasked when they wear vizors; for that secures them from blushing and being out of countenance; and, next to being in the dark, or alone, they are most truly themselves in a vizor mask.—Here they come, I'll leave you. Ply her close, and by and by clap a billet doux into her hand; for a woman never thinks a man truly in love with her, till he has been fool enough to think of her out of her sight, and to lose so much time as to write to her.

[Exit.]

Enter Sir Paul and Lady Plyant.

Sir Paul Plyant. Shan't we disturb your meditation, Mr. Careless? You would be private.

Carel. You bring that along with you, Sir Paul, that shall be always welcome to my privacy.

Sir P. Pl. O, sweet fir, you load your humble servants, both me and my wife, with continual favours.

Lady

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 117

Lady Pl. Sir Paul, what a phrase was there! You will be making answers, and taking that upon you, which ought to lie upon me. That you should have so little breeding to think Mr. Careless did not apply himself to me! Pray what have you to entertain any body's privacy? I swear and declare, in the face of the world, I'm ready to blush for your ignorance.

Sir P. Pl. I acquiesce, my lady; but don't snub so loud! [aside to her.]

Lady Pl. Mr. Careless, if a person that is wholly illiterate might be supposed to be capable of being qualified to make a suitable return to those obligations which you are pleased to confer upon one that is wholly incapable of being qualified in all those circumstances, I'm sure I should rather attempt it than any thing in the world [courtesies]—for I am sure there is nothing in the world that I would rather [courtesies]—But I know Mr. Careless is so great a critic, and so fine a gentleman, that it is impossible for me—

Carel. O heavens! madam, you confound me.

Sir P. Pl. Gads bud! she is a fine person!

Lady Pl. O lord! sir, pardon me, we women have not those advantages; I know my own imperfections—But, at the same time, you must give me leave to declare, in the face of the world, that nobody is more sensible of favours and things; for, with the reserve of my honour, I assure you, Mr. Careless, I don't know any thing in the world I would refuse to a person so meritorious—You'll pardon my want of expression.

Carel. O! your ladyship is abounding in all excellence, particularly that of phrase.

Lady Pl. You are so obliging, sir.

Carel. Your ladyship is so charming.

Sir P. Pl. So, now, now; now, my lady.

Lady Pl. So well bred.

Carel. So surprising.

Lady Pl. So well dress'd, so bonne mine, so eloquent, so unaffected, so easy, so free, so particular, so agreeable—

Sir P. Pl. Ay, so, so, there.

Carel. O Lord, I beseech you, madam, don't.

Lady

118 THE DOUBLE DEALER.

Lady Pl. So gay, so graceful, so good teeth, so fine shape, so fine limbs, so fine linen; and I don't doubt but you have a very good skin, sir.

Carel. For heaven's sake, madam—I'm quite out of countenance.

Sir P. Pl. And my lady is quite out of breath; or else you should hear—Gads bud! you may talk of my Lady Froth!

Carel. O fie, fie, not to be named of a day—My Lady Froth is very well in her accomplishments—but it is when my Lady Plyant is not thought of—if that can ever be.

Lady Pl. O you overcome me!—that is so excessive.

Sir P. Pl. Nay, I swear and vow, that was pretty.

Carel. O, Sir Paul, you are the happiest man alive. Such a lady! that is the envy of her own sex, and the admiration of ours.

Sir P. Pl. Your humble servant!—I am, I thank heaven, in a fine way of living, as I may say, peacefully and happily; and, I think, need not envy any of my neighbours, blessed be Providence!—Ay truly, Mr. Careless, my lady is a great blessing; a fine, discreet, well-spoken woman as you shall see—if it becomes me to say so; and we live very comfortably together; she is a little hasty sometimes, and so am I; but mine's soon over, and then I'm so sorry—O, Mr. Careless, if it were not for one thing—

Enter Boy with a letter and offers it to Sir Paul.

Lady Pl. How often have you been told of that, you jackanapes?

Sir P. Pl. Gad so, Gads bud!—Tim, carry it to my lady; you should have carried it to my lady first.

Boy. 'Tis directed to your worship.

Sir P. Pl. Well, well, my lady reads all letters first—Child, do so no more; d'ye hear, Tim?

Boy. No, an't please you.

Sir P. Pl. A humour of my wife's; you know women have little fancies—But, as I was telling you, Mr. Careless, if it were not for one thing, I should think myself

Self the happiest man in the world; indeed that touches me near, very near!

Carel. What can that be, Sir Paul?

Sir P. Pl. Why, I have, I thank heaven, a very plentiful fortune, a good estate in the country, some houses in town, and some money, a pretty tolerable personal estate; and it is a great grief to me, indeed it is, Mr. Careless, that I have not a son to inherit this—'Tis true, I have a daughter; and a fine dutiful child she is, though I say it, blessed be Providence, I may say; for indeed, Mr. Careless, I am mightily beholden to Providence—a poor unworthy sinner—But if I had a son, ah, that's my affliction, and my only affliction; indeed I cannot refrain tears when it comes in my mind. [sobs.]

Carel. Why, methinks that might be easily remedied—my lady's a fine likely woman—

Sir P. Pl. Oh, a fine likely woman as you shall see in a summer's day!—Indeed she is, Mr. Careless, in all respects.

Carel. And I should not have taken you to have been so old—

Sir P. Pl. Alas, that's not it, Mr. Careless; ah! that's not it; no, no, you shoot wide of the mark a mile, indeed you do; that's not it, Mr. Careless; no, no, that's not it.

Carel. No? what can be the matter then?

Sir P. Pl. You'll scarcely believe me, when I shall tell you—my lady is so nice—it is very strange, but it is true, too true—she is so very nice, that I don't believe she would touch a man for the world—at least not above once a year; I'm sure I have found it so; and alas, what is once a year to an old man, who would do good in his generation? Indeed it's true, Mr. Careless, it breaks my heart!—I am her husband, as I may say; though far unworthy of that honour; yet I am her husband; but alas-a-day, I have no more familiarity with her person—as to that matter—than with my own mother—no indeed!

Carel. Alas-a-day, this is a lamentable story; my lady must be told on't; she must, i'faith, Sir Paul; 'tis an injury to the world.

Sir

Sir P. Pl. Ah! would to heaven you would, Mr. Careless; you are mightily in her favour.

Carel. I warrant you; what, we must have a son some way or other.

Sir P. Pl. Indeed, I should be mightily bound to you, if you could bring it about, Mr. Careless.

Lady Pl. Here, Sir Paul, it's from your steward; here's a return of six hundred pounds; you may take fifty of it for the next half year. [gives him the letter.]

Enter Lord Froth and Cynthia.

Sir P. Pl. How does my girl? come hither to thy father—poor lamb! thou'rt melancholic.

Lord Froth. Heaven! Sir Paul! you amaze me, of all things in the world—You are never pleased but when we are all upon the broad grin; all laugh, and no company; ah, then 'tis such a sight to see some teeth—Sure you're a great admirer of my Lady Whifler, Mr. Sneer, and Sir Laurence Loud, and that gang.

Sir P. Pl. I vow and swear, she's a very merry woman; but I think she laughs a little too much.

Lord Froth. Merry! O lord, what a character that is of a woman of quality!—You have been at my Lady Whifler's upon her day, madam?

Cynth. Yes, my lord.—I must humour this fool!

Lord Froth. Well and how? hee! [aside.] What is your sense of the conversation?

Cynth. O, most ridiculous! a perpetual concert of laughing, without any harmony; for sure, my lord, to laugh out of time is as disagreeable as to sing out of time, or out of tune.

Lord Froth. Hee; hee, hee! right; and then, my Lady Whifler is so ready—she always comes in three bars too soon—And then, what do they laugh at? For you know laughing without a jest is as impertinent—hee! as, as—Cynth. As dancing without a fiddle.

Lord Froth. Just, i' faith; that was at my tongue's end.

Cynth. But that cannot be properly said of them, for I think

I think they are all in good-nature with the world, and only laugh at one another; and you must allow they have all jests in their persons, though they have none in their conversation.

Lord Froth. True, as I'm a person of honour—For heaven's sake, let us sacrifice them to mirth a little.

Enter Boy, and whispers Sir Paul.

Sir P. Pl. Gads so!—Wife, wife, my Lady Plyant, I have a word.

Lady Pl. I'm busy, Sir Paul; I wonder at your impertinence—

Carel. Sir Paul, harkye, I am reasoning the matter, you know—Madam, if your ladyship please, we will discourse of this in the next room.

[Exeunt Careless and Lady Plyant.]

Sir P. Pl. O ho, I wish you good success; I wish you good success. Boy, tell my lady, when she has done, I would speak with her below. [Exit.]

Enter Lady Froth and Brisk.

Lady Froth. Then you think that episode between Susan the dairy maid and our coachman is not amiss? You know, I may suppose the dairy in town, as well as in the country.

Brisk. Incomparable, let me perish!—But then, being an heroic poem, had not you better call him a charioteer? Charioteer sounds great, besides, your ladyship's coachman having a red face, and you comparing him to the sun—and you know the sun is called heaven's charioteer.

Lady Froth. Oh, infinitely better; I'm extremely beholden to you for the hint; stay, we'll read over these half a score lines again. [pulls out a paper.] Let me see here, you know what goes before—the comparison, you know,

Reads.] For, as the sun shines every day;

So, of our coachman I may say—

Brisk. I'm afraid that simile won't do in wet weather—because you say the sun shines every day.

Lady Froth. No, for the sun it won't; but it will do for the coachman, for you know there's most occasion for a coach in wet weather.

Brisk. Right, right; that saves all.

Lady Froth. Then I don't say the sun shines all the day, but that he peeps now and then; yet he does shine all the day too, you know, though we don't see him.

Brisk. Right; but the vulgar will never comprehend that.

Lady Froth. Well, you shall hear—Let me see.

Reads.] *For, as the sun shines every day,
So, of our coachman I may say,
He shews his drunken, fiery face,
Just as the sun does, more or less.*

Brisk. That's right, all's well—more or less.

Lady Froth reads.

*And when at night his labour's done,
Then too, like heaven's charioteer the sun :*

Ay, charioteer does better!

*Into the dairy he descends,
And there his whipping and his driving ends;
There he's secure from danger of a bilk,
His fare is paid him, and he sets in milk.*

For Susan, you know, is Thetis; and so—

Brisk. Incomparably well and proper, egad—But I have one exception to make—Don't you think bilk (I know 'tis good rhyme)—but don't you think bilk and fare too like a hackney coachman?

Lady Froth. I swear and vow, I'm afraid so—And yet our Jehu was a hackney coachman, when my Lord took him.

Brisk. Was he? I'm answered, if Jehu was a hackney coachman.—You may put that in the marginal notes though, to prevent criticism—only mark it with a small asterisk, and say,—Jehu was formerly a hackney coachman.

Lady Froth. I will; you'd oblige me extremely, to write notes to the whole poem.

Brisk. With all my heart and soul, and proud of the vast honour, let me perish!

Lord Froth. Hee, hee, hee! my dear, have you done?—Won't you join with us? We were laughing at my Lady Whifler and Mr. Sneer.

Lady

Lady Froth. Ay, my dear—were you? Oh filthy Mr. Sneer! he's a nauseous figure, a most fulsome fop, foh!—He spent two days together in going about Covent-Garden, to suit the lining of his coach with his complexion.

Lord Froth. O silly! yet his aunt is as fond of him, as if she had brought the ape into the world herself.

Brisk. Who, my Lady Toothless? O, she's a mortifying spectacle; she's always chewing the cud, like an old ewe.

Cynth. Fie, Mr. Brisk! Eringo is for her cough.

Lady Froth. I have seen her take them half chewed out of her mouth, to laugh, and then put them in again—Foh!

Lord Froth. Foh!

Lady Froth. Then she's always ready to laugh, when Sneer offers to speak—and sits in expectation of his no-jest, with her gums bare, and her mouth open—

Brisk. Like an oyster at low ebb, egad—ha, ha, ha!

Cynth. [aside.] Well, I find there are no fools so inconsiderable in themselves, but they can render other people contemptible by exposing their infirmities!

Lady Froth. Then that t'other great strapping lady—I can't hit of her name; the old fat fool, that paints so exorbitantly.

Brisk. I know whom you mean—But, deuce take me, I can't hit of her name neither—Paints, d'ye say? Why she lays it on with a trowel—Then she has a great beard, that bristles through it, and makes her look as if she were plastered with lime and hair, let me perish.

Lady Froth. Oh, you made a song upon her, Mr. Brisk.

Brisk. He! egad, so I did—My lord can sing it.

Cynth. O good my lord, let's hear it.

Brisk. 'Tis not a song neither—'Tis a sort of epigram, or rather an epigrammatic sonnet; I don't know what to call it, but it's satire.—Sing it, my lord,

Lord Froth sings.

Ancient Phyllis has young graces,

'Tis a strange thing, but a true one;

Shall I tell you how?

*She herself makes her own faces,
And each morning wears a new one;
Where's the wonder now?*

Brisk. Short, but there's salt in't; my way of writing, egad.

Enter Footman.

Lady Froth. How now?

Footm. Your ladyship's chair is come.

Lady Froth. Is nurse and the child in it?

Footm. Yes, madam.

Lady Froth. O the dear creature! let's go see it.

Lord Froth. I swear, my dear, you'll spoil that child, with sending it to and again so often; this is the seventh time the chair has gone for her to-day.

Lady Froth. O law! I swear it is but the sixth—and I han't seen her these two hours.—The poor dear creature!—I swear, my lord, you don't love poor little Sappho.—Come, my dear Cynthia, Mr. Brisk, we'll go see Sappho, though my lord won't.

Cynth. I'll wait upon your ladyship.

Brisk. Pray, madam, how old is Lady Sappho?

Lady Froth. Three quarters; but I swear she has a world of wit, and can sing a tune already. My lord, won't you go? won't you? What, not to see Saph? Pray, my lord, come see little Saph. I knew you could not stay. [Exeunt Lord Froth, Lady Froth, and Brisk.]

Cynth. 'Tis not so hard to counterfeit joy in the depth of affliction, as to dissemble mirth in company of fools!—Why should I call them fools? The world thinks better of them; for these have quality and education, wit, and fine conversation, are received and admired by the world—if not, they like and admire themselves.—And why is not that true wisdom? for 'tis happiness; and, for aught I know, we have misapplied the name all this while, and mistaken the thing: since

*If happiness in self-content is plac'd,
The wise are wretched, and fools only blest'd.*

[Exit.]

End of the Third Act.

ACT

A C T IV.

Enter Mellefont and Cynthia.

Cynth. I Heard him loud as I came by the closet-door, and my lady with him; but she seemed to moderate his passion.

Mell. Ay, hell thank her! as gentle breezes moderate a fire; but I shall counter-work her spells, and ride the witch in her own bridle.

Cynth. It is impossible; she'll cast beyond you still—I'll lay my life, it will never be a match.

Mell. What?

Cynth. Between you and me.

Mell. Why so?

Cynth. My mind gives me it won't—because we are both willing; we each of us strive to reach the goal, and hinder one another in the race; I swear, it never does well, when the parties are so agreed—for when people walk hand in hand, there's neither overtaking nor meeting. We hunt in couples, where we both pursue the same game, but forget one another; and 'tis because we are so near, that we don't think of coming together.

Mell. Hum! egad, I believe there's something in it—Marriage is the game that we hunt; and while we think that we only have it in view, I don't see but we have it in our power.

Cynth. Within reach; for example, give me your hand. You have looked through the wrong end of the perspective all this while; for nothing has been between us but our fears.

Mell. I don't know why we should not steal out of the house this very moment, and marry one another, without consideration, or the fear of repentance. Plague on fortune, portion, settlements, and jointures!

Cynth. Ay, ay, what have we to do with them? you know, we marry for love.

Mell. Love, love, down-right very villainous love.

Cynth. And he that can't live upon love, deserves to die in a ditch.—Here then I give you my promise, in spite of duty, any temptation of wealth, your inconstancy, or my own inclination to change—

Mell. To run most wilfully and unreasonably away with me this moment, and be married.

Cynth. Hold—Never to marry any body else.

Mell. That's but a kind of negative consent—Why, you won't baulk the frolic?

Cynth. If you had not been so assured of your own conduct, I would not—But 'tis but reasonable that, since I consent to like a man without the vile consideration of money, he should give me a very evident demonstration of his wit. Therefore let me see you undermine my Lady Touchwood, as you boasted, and force her to give her consent, and then—

Mell. I'll do't.

Cynth. And I'll do't.

Mell. This very next ensuing hour of eight o'clock is the last minute of her reign, unless the devil assist her in propria persona.

Cynth. Well, if the devil should assist her, and your plot miscarry—

Mell. Ay, what am I to trust to then?

Cynth. Why, if you give me very clear demonstration that it was the devil, I'll allow for irresistible odds. But if I find it to be only chance, or destiny, or unlucky stars, or any thing but the very devil, I'm inexorable. Only still I'll keep my word, and live a maid for your sake.

Mell. And you won't die one, for your own; so still there's hope.

Cynth. Here's my mother-in-law, and your friend Careless; I would not have them see us together yet.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Careless and Lady Plyant.

Lady Pl. I swear, Mr. Careless, you are very alluring—and say so many fine things, and nothing is so moving to me as a fine thing. Well, I must do you this justice, and declare in the face of the world, never any body gained so far upon me as yourself; with blushes I must own it, you have shaken, as I may say, the very foundation of my honour—Well, sure, if I escape

escape your importunities, I shall value myself as long as I live, I swear.

Carel. And despise me!

[sighing.]

Lady Pl. The last of any man in the world, by my purity; now you make me swear.—O gratitude, forbid! that I should ever be wanting in a respectful acknowledgment of an entire resignation of all my best wishes; for the person and parts of so accomplished a person, whose merit challenges much more, I am sure, than my illiterate praises can description—

Carel. [in a whining tone.] Ah, heavens! madam, you ruin me with kindness; your charming tongue pursues the victory of your eyes, while at your feet your poor adorer dies.

Lady Pl. Ah! very fine!

Carel. [still whining.] Ah! why are you so fair, so bewitching fair? O, let me grow to the ground here, and feast upon that hand!—O, let me press it to my heart, my trembling heart; the nimble movement shall instruct your pulse, and teach it to alarm desire.—Zoons, I am almost at the end of my cant, if she does not yield quickly!

[aside.]

Lady Pl. O that's so passionate and fine, I cannot hear it—I am not safe if I stay, and must leave you.

Carel. And must you leave me? Rather let me languish out a wretched life, and breathe my soul beneath your feet.—I must say the same thing over again, and cannot help it.

[aside.]

Lady Pl. I swear, I am ready to languish too—O my honour! whither is it going? I protest, you have given me the palpitation of the heart.

Carel. Can you be so cruel?

Lady Pl. O rise, I beseech you, say no more till you rise—Why did you kneel so long? I swear, I was so transported, I did not see it.—Well, to shew you how far you have gained upon me; I assure you, if Sir Paul should die—of all mankind, there's none I'd sooner make my second choice.

Carel. O heaven! I can't outlive this night without your favour—I feel my spirits faint, a general dampness overspreads my face, a cold deadly dew already vents through all my pores, and will to-morrow wash me for ever from your sight, and drown me in my tomb.

Lady Pl. O you have conquered! sweet, melting, moving sir, you have conquered!—What heart of marble can refrain to weep, and yield to such sad sayings? [cries.]

Carel. [aside.] I thank heaven, they are the saddest that I ever said—Oh!—I shall never contain laughter!

Lady Pl. Oh, I yield myself all up to your uncontrollable embraces!—Say, thou dear, dying man, when, where, and how?—Ah! there's Sir Paul!

Carel. 'Slife, yonder's Sir Paul; but, if he were not come, I'm so transported I cannot speak—This note will inform you. [Gives her a note. Exit.]

Enter Sir Paul Plyant and Cynthia.

Sir P. Pl. Thou art my tender lambkin, and shalt do what thou wilt.—But endeavour to forget this Mellefont.

Cynth. I would obey you to my power, sir; but, if I have not him, I have sworn never to marry.

Sir P. Pl. Never to marry! Heavens forbid! must I neither have sons nor grandsons? must the family of the Plyants be utterly extinct, for want of issue male? Oh impiety! But did you swear, did that sweet creature swear? ha! How durst you swear without my consent, ha? Gads bud! who am I?

Cynth. Pray, don't be angry, sir; when I swore, I had your consent; and therefore I swore.

Sir P. Pl. Why then the revoking my consent does annul, or make of none effect, your oath, so you may unswear it again—The law will allow it.

Cynth. Ay, but my conscience never will.

Sir P. Pl. Gads bud! no matter for that: conscience and law never go together; you must not expect that.

Lady Pl. Ay, but, Sir Paul, I conceive, if she has sworn, d'ye mark me, if she has once sworn, it is most unchristian, inhuman, and obscene, that she should break it.—I'll make up the match again, because Mr. Careless said it would oblige him: [aside.]

Sir P. Pl. Does your ladyship conceive so?—Why, I was

I was of that opinion once too.—Nay, if your ladyship conceives so, I'm of that opinion again; but I can neither find my lord nor my lady, to know what they intend.

Lady Pl. I am satisfied that my cousin Mellefont has been much wronged.

Cynth. [aside.] I am amazed to find her of our side, for I am sure she loved him.

Lady Pl. I know my Lady Touchwood has no kindness for him; and besides I have been informed by Mr. Careless, that Mellefont had never any thing more than a profound respect—That he has owned himself to be my admirer, 'tis true; but he was never so presumptuous to entertain any dishonourable notions of things; so that if this be made plain—I don't see how my daughter can in conscience, or honour, or any thing in the world—

Sir P. Pl. Indeed, if this be made plain, as my lady your mother says, child—

Lady Pl. Plain! I was informed of it by Mr. Careless—and, I assure you, Mr. Careless is a person—that has a most extraordinary respect and honour for you, Sir Paul.

Cynth. [aside.] And for your ladyship too, I believe, or else you had not changed sides so soon—now I begin to find it.

Sir P. Pl. I am much obliged to Mr. Careless, really; he is a person that I have a great value for—not only for that, but because he has a great veneration for your ladyship.

Lady Pl. O las! no indeed, Sir Paul, 'tis upon your account.

Sir P. Pl. No, I protest and vow, I have no title to his esteem, but in having the honour to appertain in some measure to your ladyship; that's all.

Lady Pl. O law now, I swear and declare, it shan't be so; you're too modest, Sir Paul.

Sir P. Pl. It becomes me, when there is any comparison made between—

Lady Pl. O fy, fy, Sir Paul! you'll put me out of countenance—Your very obedient and affectionate wife; that's all—and highly honoured in that title.

Sir P. Pl. Gads bud, I am transported! give me leave to kiss your ladyship's hand.

Cynth. That my poor father should be so very silly!

Lady Pl. My lip indeed, Sir Paul; I swear, you shall. [be kisses her, and bows very low.]

Sir P. Pl. I humbly thank your ladyship—I don't know whether I fly on ground, or walk in air—Gads bud, she was never thus before—well, I must own myself the most beholden to Mr. Careless—as sure as can be, this is all his doing—something that he has said; well, 'tis a rare thing to have an ingenious friend. Well, your ladyship is of opinion that the match may go forward?

Lady Pl. By all means—Mr. Careless has satisfied me of the matter.

Sir P. Pl. Well, why then, lamb, you may keep your oath; but have a care of making rash vows—come hither to me, and kiss papa.

Lady Pl. I swear and declare I am in such a twitter to read Mr. Careless's letter, that I can't forbear any longer—But, though I may read all letters first by prerogative, yet I'll be sure to be unsuspected this time.—Sir Paul.

Sir P. Pl. Did your ladyship call?

Lady Pl. Nay, not to interrupt you, my dear—Only lend me your letter, which you had from your steward to-day: I would look upon the account again; and, may be, increase your allowance.

Sir P. Pl. There it is, madam. Do you want a pen and ink?

[bows, and gives the letter.]

Lady Pl. No, no, nothing else, I thank you, Sir Paul.—So, now I can read my own letter under the cover of his. [aside.]

Sir P. Pl. He? And wilt thou bring a grandson at nine months end—he? a brave chopping boy?—I'll settle a thousand pounds a year upon the rogue as soon as ever he looks me in the face; I will, Gads bud. I'm overjoyed to think I have any of my family that will bring children into the world; for I would fain have have some resemblance of myself in my posterity; he! Thy? can't you contrive that affair, girl? Do, Gads bud! think on thy old father; heh? make the young rogue as like as you can.

Cynth. I'm glad to see you so merry, fir.

Sir P. Pl. Merry! Gads bud, I'm serious; I'll give thee five hundred pounds for every inch of him that resembles me. Ah, this eye, this left eye! a thousand pounds for this left eye. This has done execution in its time, girl—why thou hast my leer, hussy, just thy father's leer.—Let it be transmitted to the young rogue, by the help of imagination; why 'tis the mark of our family, Thy; our house is distinguished by a languishing eye, as the house of Austria is by a thick lip.—Ah! when I was of your age, hussy, I would have held fifty to one, I could have drawn my own picture.—Gads bud, I could have done—not so much as you neither—but—nay, don't blush—

Cynth. I don't blush, fir; for, I vow, I don't understand—

Sir P. Pl. Pshaw, pshaw, you fib, you baggage, you do understand; and you shall understand; come, don't be so nice; Gads bud, don't learn after your mother-in-law my lady here: Marry, heaven forbid that you should follow her example! that would spoil all indeed. Bless us, if you should take a vagary, and make a rash resolution on your wedding-night, to die a maid, as she did; all were ruined; all my hopes lost.—My heart would break, and my estate would be left to the wide world, he? I hope you are a better Christian than to think of living a nun; he? answer me.

Cynth. I'm all obedience, fir, to your commands.

Lady Pl. [having read the letter.] O dear Mr. Careless! I swear, he writes charmingly, and he looks charmingly, and he has charmed me as much as I have charmed him; and so I'll tell him in the wardrobe when 'tis dark. O Crimine! I hope Sir Paul has not seen both letters. [puts the letter hastily up, and gives him her own.]—Sir Paul, here's your letter; to-morrow morning I'll settle accòmpts to your advantage.

Enter Brisk.

Brisk. Sir Paul, Gads bud you're an uncivil person, let me tell you, and all that; and I did not think it had been in you.

Sir P. Pl. O law! what's the matter now? I hope you are not angry, Mr. Brisk.

Brisk. Deuce take me, I believe you intend to marry your daughter yourself; you're always brooding over her, like an old hen, as if she were not well hatched, egad, he?

Sir P. Pl. Good strange! Mr. Brisk is such a merry, facetious person, he, he, he! No, no, I have done with her, I have done with her now.

Brisk. The fiddles have stayed this hour in the hall, and my Lord Froth wants a partner; we can never begin without her.

Sir P. Pl. Go, go, child, go; get you gone, and dance, and be merry;—I'll come and look at you by and by.—Where's my son Mellefont?

Lady Pl. I'll send him to them: I know where he is.

Brisk. Sir Paul, will you send Careless into the hall, if you meet him?

Sir P. Pl. I will, I will; I'll go and look for him on purpose.

[Exeunt Sir Paul and Cynthia.

Brisk. So, now they are all gone, and I have an opportunity to practise.—Ah! my dear Lady Froth! she's a most engaging creature, if she were not so fond of that damned coxcomby lord of hers; and yet I am forced to allow him wit too, to keep in with him.—No matter, she's a woman of parts, and, egad, parts will carry her. She said, she would follow me into the gallery—Now to make my approaches—Hem, hem! Ah ma- (bows) dam!—Pox on't! why should I disparage my parts by thinking what to say? none but dull rogues think. Witty men, like rich fellows, are always ready for all expences; while your blockheads, like poor needy scoundrels, are forced to examine their stock, and forecast the charges of the day. Here she comes:

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 137

comes: I'll seem not to see her, and try to win her with a new airy invention of my own: hem!

Enter Lady Froth.

[Brisk sings, walking about.] I'm sick with love, ha, ha, ha! pr'ythee come cure me, I'm sick with, &c.—O ye powers! O my Lady Froth! my Lady Froth! my Lady Froth! heigho! break my heart; Gods, I thank you. [stands musing, with his arms across.

Lady Froth. O heavens, Mr. Brisk! what's the matter?

Brisk. My Lady Froth! your ladyship's most humble servant.—The matter, madam? Nothing, madam; nothing at all, egad. I was fallen into the most agreeable amusement in the whole province of contemplation: that's all.—I'll seem to conceal my passion, and that will look like respect. [aside.

Lady Froth. Bless me, why did you call out upon me so loud?

Brisk. O Lord! I, madam! I beseech your ladyship—when?

Lady Froth. Just now as I came in, bless me! why, don't you know it?

Brisk. Not I, let me perish!—But did I? strange! I confess, your ladyship was in my thoughts; and I was in a sort of dream, that did in a manner present a very pleasing object to my imagination: but—but did I indeed?—To see how love and murder will out. But did I really name my Lady Froth?

Lady Froth. Three times aloud, as I love letters.—But did you talk of love? O Parnassus! who would have thought Mr. Brisk could have been in love, ha, ha, ha! O heavens! I thought you could have no mistress but the nine muses.

Brisk. No more I have, egad, for I adore them all in your ladyship—Let me perish, I don't know whether to be splenetie or airy upon't; the deuce take me if I can tell whether I am glad or sorry that your ladyship has made the discovery.

Lady Froth. O be merry, by all means—Prince Volscius in love! ha, ha, ha!

Brisk. O barbarous, to turn me into ridicule! Yet, ha, ha, ha, ha! The deuce take me, I can't help laughing myself, ha, ha, ha; yet, by heavens, I have a violent passion for your ladyship, seriously.

Lady Froth. Seriously? ha, ha, ha!

Brisk. Seriously, ha, ha, ha! Gad I have, for all I laugh.

Lady Froth. Ha, ha, ha! What do you think I laugh at?

Brisk. Me, egad, ha, ha!

Lady Froth. No, the deuce take me if I don't laugh at myself; for hang me if I have not a violent passion for Mr. Brisk, ha, ha, ha!

Brisk. Seriously?

Lady Froth. Seriously, ha, ha, ha!

Brisk. That's well enough; let me perish, ha, ha, ha! O miraculous! what a happy discovery! Ah my dear charming Lady Froth!

Lady Froth. Oh my adored Mr. Brisk! [embrace.

Enter Lord Froth.

Lord Froth. The company are all ready—How now?

Brisk. Zoons, madam, there's my lord.

Lady Froth. Take no notice—but observe me—Now cast off; and meet me at the lower end of the room, and then join hands again. I could teach my lord this dance purely; but I vow, Mr. Brisk, I can't tell how to come so near any other man. O, here's my lord; now you shall see me do it with him.

Lord Froth. [aside] Oh, I see there's no harm yet—but I don't like this familiarity.

Lady Froth. Shall you and I do our close dance, to shew Mr. Brisk?

Lord Froth. No, my dear, do it with him.

Lady Froth. I'll do it with him, my lord, when you are out of the way.

Brisk. That's good, egad, that's good.—Deuce take me, I can hardly hold laughing in his face. [aside.

Lord Froth. Any other time, my dear; or we'll dance it below.

Lady Froth. With all my heart.

Briek. Come, my lord, I'll wait on you.—My charming, witty angel!

Lady Froth. We shall have whispering-time enough, you know, since we are partners. [Exeunt.]

Enter Lady Plyant and Careless.

Lady Plyant. O Mr. Careless! Mr. Careless! I'm ruined, I am undone!

Careless. What's the matter, madam?

Lady Plyant. O, the unluckiest accident! I'm afraid I shan't live to tell it you.

Careless. Heaven forbid! what is it?

Lady Plyant. I'm in such a fright; the strangest quandary and premunire! I'm all over in an universal agitation, I dare swear every circumstance of me trembles.—O your letter! your letter! by an unfortunate mistake, I have given Sir Paul your letter instead of his own.

Careless. That was unlucky.

Lady Plyant. O, yonder he comes, reading of it; for heavens sake step in here, and advise me quickly, before he sees. [Exeunt.]

Enter Sir Paul, with the letter.

Sir Pl. Plyant. O providence! what a conspiracy have I discovered! But let me see to make an end on't.—(reads) Hum!—"After supper, in the wardrobe by the gallery. If Sir Paul should surprise us, I have a commission from him to treat with you about the very matter of fact."—Matter of fact! Very pretty; it seems then I am conducting to my own cuckoldom: why this is the very traiterous position of taking up arms by my authority, against my person! Well, let me see—"Till then, I languish in expectation of my adored charmer. Dying Ned Careless." Gads-bud! would that were matter of fact too. Thou Judas Maccabeus, and Iscariot both. O friendship! what art thou but a name? Henceforth let no man make a friend, that would not be a cuckold: for whomsoever he receives into his bosom, will find the way to his bed, and there return his careffes with interest to his wife. Have I for this been pinioned night after night for three years years past? Have I been swathed in blankets, till I have been even deprived of motion? Have I approached the marriage bed with reverence as to a sacred shrine, and denied myself the enjoyment of lawful and domestic pleasures, to preserve its purity? and must I now find it polluted by foreign iniquity? O, my Lady Plyant, you were chaste as ice; but you are melted now, and false as water.—But Providence has been constant to me, in discovering this conspiracy! Still I am beholden to Providence; if it were not for Providence, sure, poor Sir Paul, thy heart would break!

Enter Lady Plyant.

Lady Plyant. So, Sir, I see you have read the letter.—Well now, Sir Paul, what do you think of your friend Careless? Has he been treacherous? or did you give his insolence a licence to make trial of your wife's suspected virtue? Do ye see here? [snatches the letter, as in anger.] Look, read it! Gad's my life! if I thought it were so, I would this moment renounce all communication with you. Ungrateful monster! He? Is it so? Ay, I see it, a plot upon my honour; your guilty cheeks confess it. Oh, where shall wronged virtue fly for reparation! I'll be divorced this instant.

Sir Pl. Plyant. Gads bud, what shall I say? This is the strangest surprise! Why I don't know any thing at all, nor I don't know whether there be any thing at all in the world, or no.

Lady Plyant. I thought I should try you, false man! I that never disssembled in my life: yet, to make trial of you, pretended to like that monster of iniquity, Careless; and found out that contrivance to let you see this letter; which now I find was of your own inditing—I do, heathen, I do: see my face no more; I'll be divorced presently.

Sir Pl. Plyant. O strange! what will become of me?—I'm so amazed, and so overjoyed, so afraid, and so sorry.—But did you give me this letter on purpose, he? Did you?

Lady Plyant. Did I? Do you doubt me, Turk, Saracen? I have a cousin that's a proctor in the commons.—I'll go to him instantly.

Sir

Sir Pl. Plyant. Hold, stay, I beseech your ladyship—I'm so overjoyed, stay, I'll confess all.

Lady Plyant. What will you confess, Jew?

Sir Pl. Plyant. Why now, as I hope to be saved, I had no hand in this letter—Nay hear me, I beseech your ladyship. The devil take me now, if he did not go beyond my commission!—If I desired him to do any more than speak a good word only just for me; Gadsbud, only for poor Sir Paul—I'm an Anabaptist, or a Jew, or what you please to call me.

Lady Plyant. Why, is not here matter of fact?

Sir Pl. Plyant. Ay, but, by your own virtue and continency, that matter of fact is all his own doing—I confess I had a great desire to have some honours conferred upon me, which lie all in your ladyship's breast; and, he being a well-spoken man, I desired him to intercede for me.

Lady Plyant. Did you so? Presumption! Oh! he comes, the Tarquin comes; I cannot bear his sight.

[Exit.]

Enter Careless.

Carel. Sir Paul, I'm glad I've met with you; egad I have said all I could, but cannot prevail—Then my friendship to you has carried me a little farther in this matter—

Sir Pl. Plyant. Indeed! Well, Sir.—I'll dissemble with him a little.

[aside.]

Carel. Why, faith, I have in my time known honest gentlemen abused by a pretended coyness in their wives; and I had a mind to try my lady's virtue—and when I could not prevail for you, egad, I pretended to be in love myself—but all in vain, she would not hear a word upon that subject. Then I wrote a letter to her; I don't know what effects that will have, but I'll be sure to tell you when I do, though, by this light, I believe her virtue is impregnable.

Sir Pl. Plyant. O Providence! Providence! What discoveries are here made? Why this is better and more miraculous than the rest.

Carel. What do you mean?

Sir Pl. Plyant. I can't tell you, I'm so overjoyed; come

138 THE DOUBLE DEALER.

come along with me to my lady, I cannot contain myself; come, my dear friend.

Carel. [aside.] So, so, so, this difficulty's over. [Exeunt. Enter Mellefont and Maskwell, from different doors.]

Mell. Maskwell! I have been looking for you—it is within a quarter of eight.

Maskw. My lady is just gone into my lord's closet. You had best steal into her chamber before she comes, and lie concealed there; otherwise she may lock the door when we are together, and you not easily get in, to surprise us.

Mell. He? You say true.

Maskw. You had best make haste; for, after she has made some apology to the company for her own and my lord's absence all this while, she'll retire to her chamber instantly.

Mell. I go this moment. Now, fortune, I defy thee. [Exit.]

Maskw. I confess you may be allowed to be secure in your own opinion; the appearance is very fair, but I have an after-game to play, that shall turn the tables; and here comes the man that I must manage.

Enter Lord Touchwood.

Lord Touchw. Maskwell, you are the man I wished to meet.

Maskw. I am happy to be in the way of your lordship's commands.

Lord Touchw. I have always found you prudent and careful in any thing that has concerned me or my family.

Maskw. I were a villain else—I am bound, by duty and gratitude, and my own inclination, to be ever your lordship's servant.

Lord Touchw. Enough—You are my friend; I know it: Yet there has been a thing in your knowledge, which has concerned me nearly, that you have concealed from me.

Maskw. My lord!

Lord Touchw. Nay, I excuse your friendship to my unnatural nephew thus far—But I know you have been privy to his impious designs upon my wife. This evening

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 139

ing she has told me all: her good-nature concealed it as long as was possible; but he perseveres so in villainy, that she has told me even you were weary of dissuading him, though you have once actually hindered him from forcing her.

Maskw. I am sorry, my lord, I cannot make you an answer; this is an occasion in which I would not willingly be silent.

Lord Touchw. I know you would excuse him—and, I know as well that you cannot.

Maskw. Indeed I was in hopes it had been a youthful heat, that might have soon boiled over; but—

Lord Touchw. Say on.

Maskw. I have nothing more to say, my lord—but to express my concern; for I think his frenzy increases daily.

Lord Touchw. How! Give me but proof of it, ocular proof, that I may justify my dealing with him to the world; and share my fortunes.

Maskw. O my lord! consider that is hard: besides, time may work upon him. Then, for me to do it! I have professed an everlasting friendship to him.

Lord Touchw. He is your friend; and what am I?

Maskw. I am answered.

Lord Touchw. Fear not his displeasure; I will put you out of his and fortune's power; and, for that thou art scrupulously honest, I will secure thy fidelity to him, and give my honour never to own any discovery that you shall make me. Can you give me a demonstrative proof? speak.

Maskw. I wish I could not!—To be plain, my lord, I intended this evening to have tried all arguments to dissuade him from a design which I suspect; and if I had not succeeded, to have informed your lordship of what I knew.

Lord Touchw. I thank you. What is the villain's purpose?

Maskw. He has owned nothing to me of late; and what I mean now, is only a bare suspicion of my own. If your lordship will meet me a quarter of an hour hence there, there, in that lobby by my lady's bed-chamber, I shall be able to tell you more.

Lord Touchw. I will.

Maskw. My duty to your lordship makes me do a severe piece of justice.

Lord Touchw. I will be secret, and reward your honesty beyond your hopes. [Exeunt.]

SCENE opening shews Lady Touchwood's Chamber.

Mell. solus. Pray heaven my aunt keep touch with her affignation.—Oh, that her lord were but sweating behind this hanging, with the expectation of what I shall see!—Hift, she comes—Little does she think what a mine is just ready to spring under her feet! But to my post. [goes behind the hangings.]

Enter Lady Touchwood.

Lady Touchw. It is eight o'clock: methinks I should have found him here. Who does not prevent the hour of love, outstays the time; for to be duly punctual, is too slow.—I was accusing you of neglect.

Enter Maskwell.

Maskw. I confess, you do reproach me when I see you here before me; but it is fit I should be still behind-hand, still to be more and more indebted to your goodness.

Lady Touchw. You can excuse a fault too well, not to have been to blame.—A ready answer shews you were prepared.

Maskw. Guilt is ever at a loss, and confusion waits upon it; when innocence and bold truth are always ready for expression—

Lady Touchw. Not in love. Words are the weak support of cold indifference; love has no language to be heard.

Maskw. Excess of joy has made me stupid! Thus may my lips be ever closed. [kisses her.] And thus—Oh, who would not lose his speech, upon condition to have joys above it?

Lady Touchw. Hold, let me lock the door first.

Mask. [aside.] That I believed; it was well I left the private passage open. [goes to the door.]

Lady

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 141

Lady Touchw. So, that is safe.

Maskw. And so may all your pleasures be, and secret as this kiss!

Mellef. And may all treachery be thus discovered!

Lady Touchw. Ah! [leaps out.]

Mellef. Villain! [strikes.]

Maskw. Nay then, there is but one way. [offers to draw.]

Mellef. Say you so, were you provided for an escape? Hold, madam, you have no more holes to your burrow. I'll stand between you and this sally-port.

Lady Touchw. Shame, grief, and ruin haunt thee for this deceit!—Oh! I could rack myself, play the vulture to my own heart, and gnaw it piece-meal, for not boding to me this misfortune.

Mellef. Be patient!

Lady Touchw. Be damned.

Mellef. Consider, I have you on the hook; you will but flounder yourself a-weary, and be nevertheless my prisoner.

Lady Touchw. I'll hold my breath, and die, but I'll be free.

Mellef. O madam, have a care of dying unprepared; I doubt you have some unrepented sins, that may hang heavy, and retard your flight.

Lady Touchw. O! what shall I do? say, whither shall I turn? has hell no remedy?

Mellef. None. Hell has served you even as heaven has done, left you to yourself.—You are in a kind of Erasmus's paradise; yet, if you please, you may make it a purgatory; and, with a little penance and my absolution, all this may turn to good account.

Lady Touchw. [aside.] Hold in, my passion; and fall, fall a little, thou swelling heart! Let me have some intermission of this rage, and one minute's coolness to dissemble. [she weeps.]

Mellef. You have been to blame.—I like those tears, and hope they are of the purest kind—penitential tears.

Lady Touchw. O, the scene was shifted quick before me—I had not time to think.—I was surprised to see a monster monster in the glass, and now I find 'tis myself. Can you have mercy, to forgive the faults I have imagined, but never put in practice?—O consider, consider how fatal you have been to me; you have already killed the quiet of this life. The love of you was the first wandering fire that e'er misled my steps; and, while I had only that in view, I was betrayed into unthought-of ways of ruin.

Mellef. May I believe this true?

Lady Touchw. O, be not cruelly incredulous!—How can you doubt these streaming eyes? Keep the severest eye o'er all my future conduct; and, if I once relapse, let me not hope forgiveness; 'twill ever be in your power to ruin me.—My lord shall sign to your desires; I will myself create your happiness, and Cynthia shall be this night your bride.—Do but conceal my failings, and forgive.

Mellef. Upon such terms, I will be ever yours, in every honest way.

Maskwell softly introduces Lord Touchwood, and retires.

Maskw. I have kept my word: he's here; but I must not be seen.

Lord Touchw. Hell and amazement! she's in tears.

Lady Touchw. [kneeling.] Eternal blessings thank you!—Ha! my lord listening! O! fortune has o'er-paid me all! All, all's my own! [aside.

Mellef. Nay, I beseech you rise.

Lady Touchw. [aloud.] Never, never! I'll grow to the ground, be buried quick beneath it, ere I'll be consenting to so damned a sin as incest! unnatural incest!

Mellef. Ha!

Lady Touchw. O cruel man! will you not let me go? I'll forgive all that's past—O heaven! you will not ravish me?

Mellef. Damnation!

Lord Touchwood. Monster! dog! your life shall answer this—[draws, and runs at Mellefont, is held by Lady Touchwood.

Lady Touchw. O, heavens, my lord! hold, hold, for heaven's sake.

Mellef.

Mellef. Confusion! my uncle! O the damned for-cerers!

Lady Touchw. Moderate your rage, good my lord! he's mad, alas he's mad—indeed he is, my lord, and knows not what he does—see how wild he looks!

Mellef. By heaven, 'twere senseless not to be mad, and see such witchcraft.

Lady Touchw. My lord, you hear him; he talks idly.

Lord Touchw. Hence from my sight, thou living infamy to my name; when next I see that face, I'll write villain in't with my sword's point.

Mellef. Now, by my life, I will not go till I have made known my wrongs—nay, till I have made known yours, which (if possible) are greater—though she has all the host of hell her servants.

Lady Touchw. Alas, he raves! talks very poetry! For heaven's sake away, my lord; he'll either tempt you to extravagance, or commit some himself.

Mellef. Death and furies! will you not hear me!—Why, by heaven, she laughs, grins, points to your back; she forks out cuckoldom with her fingers, and you're running horn-mad after your fortune.

[as she is going, she turns back and smiles at him.]

Lord Touchw. I fear he's mad indeed.—Let's send Maskwell to him.

Mellef. Send him to her.

Lady Touchw. Come, come, good my lord; my heart akes so, I shall faint if I stay.

[Exeunt Lord and Lady Touchwood.]

Mellef. O, I could curse my stars, fate, and chance; all causes and accidents of fortune in this life! but to what purpose? Yet, 'death, for a man to have the fruit of all his industry grow full and ripe, ready to drop into his mouth; and just when he holds out his hand to gather it, to have a sudden whirlwind come, tear up tree and all, and bear away the very root and foundation of his hopes! What temper can contain? They talk of sending Maskwell to me; I never had more need of him—But what can he do? Imagination cannot form a fairer and more plausible design than this of his, which has miscarried.—O my precious aunt! I shall never thrive, thrive, without I deal with the devil, or another woman.

*Women, like flames, have a destroying power,
Ne'er to be quench'd, till they themselves devour.*

[Exit.

End of the Fourth Act.

A C T V.

Enter Lady Touchwood and Maskwell.

Lady Touchw. WAS it not lucky?

Mask. Lucky! Fortune is your own, and 'tis her interest so to be; by heaven, I believe you can control her power, and she fears it. Though chance brought my lord, 'twas your own art that turned it to advantage.

Lady Touchw. 'Tis true, it might have been my ruin.—But yonder's my lord, I believe he's coming to find you; I'll not be seen. [Exit.

Maskw. So; I durst not own my introducing my lord, though it succeeded well for her; for she would have suspected a design, which I should have been puzzled to excuse. My lord is thoughtful—I'll be so too; yet he shall know my thoughts; or think he does.

Enter Lord Touchwood.

Maskw. What have I done?

Lord Touchw. Talking to himself!

Maskw. 'Twas honest—and shall I be rewarded for it? No, 'twas honest, therefore I shan't—nay, rather therefore I ought not; for it rewards itself.

Lord Touchw. Unequalled virtue! [aside.

Maskw. But should it be known! Then I have lost a friend!—He was an ill man, and I have gained; for half myself I lent him, and that I have recalled; so I have served myself; and, what is yet better, I have served a worthy lord, to whom I owe myself.

Lord Touchw. Excellent man! [aside.

Maskw. Yet I am wretched. O, there is a secret burns within this breast, which, should it once blaze forth, forth; would ruin all, consume my honest character, and brand me with the name of villain.

THE DOUBLE DEALER. 145

Lord Touchw. Ha!

Maskw. Why do I love? Yet, heaven and my waking conscience are my witnesses, I never gave one working thought a vent, which might discover that I loved; nor ever must. No, let it prey upon my heart; for I would rather die, than seem once, barely seem, dishonest. O, should it once be known I love fair Cynthia, all this that I have done would look like rival's malice, false friendship to my lord, and base self-interest. Let me perish first, and from this hour avoid all sight and speech, and, if I can, all thought of that pernicious beauty. Ha! But what is my distraction doing? I am wildly talking to myself, and some ill chance might have directed malicious ears this way. [seems to start, seeing my Lord.]

Lord Touchw. Start not—let guilty and dishonest souls start at the revelation of their thoughts; but be thou fixed, as is thy virtue.

Maskw. I am confounded, and beg your lordship's pardon for those free discourses which I have had with myself.

Lord Touchw. Come, I beg your pardon that I overheard you, and yet it shall not need—Honest Maskwell! thy and my good genius led me hither—Mine, in that I have discovered so much manly virtue; thine, in that thou shalt have due reward of all thy worth. Give me thy hand—my nephew is the alone remaining branch of all our ancient family; him I thus blow away, and constitute thee in his room to be my heir.

Maskw. Now heaven forbid!

Lord Touchw. No more—I have resolved.—The writings are ready drawn, and wanted nothing but to be signed, and have his name inserted—yours will fill the blank as well—I will have no reply—let me command this time; for 'tis the last, in which I will assume authority—hereafter, you shall rule where I have power.

Maskw. I humbly would petition—

Lord Touchw. Is't for yourself?—[Maskw. pauses]
I'll hear of nought for any body else.

VOL. I.

H

Maskw.

Maskw. Then witness heaven for me, this wealth and honour was not of my seeking, nor would I build my fortune on another's ruin: I had but one desire——

Lord Touchw. Thou shalt enjoy it—If all I'm worth in wealth or interest can purchase Cynthia, she is thine.—I'm sure Sir Paul's consent will follow fortune; I'll quickly shew him which way that is going.

Maskw. You oppress me with bounty; my gratitude is weak, and shrinks beneath the weight, and cannot rise to thank you.—What, enjoy my love! Forgive the transports of a blessing so unexpected, so unhop'd for, so unthought of!

Lord Touchw. I will confirm it, and rejoice with thee. [Exit.]

Maskw. This is prosperous indeed!—Why let him find me out a villain, settled in possession of a fair estate, and full fruition of my love, I'll bear the railings of a losing gamester.—But should he find me out before! 'tis dangerous to delay.—Let me think—should my lord proceed to treat openly of my marriage with Cynthia, all must be discovered, and Mellefont can be no longer blinded.—It must not be; nay, should my lady know it—ay, then were fine work indeed! Her fury would spare nothing, though she involved herself in ruin. No, it must be by stratagem—I must deceive Mellefont once more, and get my lord to consent to my private management. He comes opportunely. Now will I, in my old way, discover the whole and real truth of the matter to him, that he may not suspect one word on't.

No mask like open truth, to cover lies;

As to go naked is the best disguise.

Enter Mellefont.

Mellef. O Maskwell, what hopes? I am confounded in a maze of thoughts, each leading into another, and all ending in perplexity. My uncle will not see nor hear me.

Maskw. No matter, Sir; don't trouble your head: all's in my power.

Mellef. How? for heaven's sake!

Maskw. Little do you think that your aunt has kept her word.—How the devil she wrought my lord into this

this dotage, I know not; but he's gone to Sir Paul about my marriage with Cynthia, and has appointed me his heir.

Mellef. The devil he has! What's to be done?

Maskw. I have it, it must be by stratagem; for it's in vain to make application to him; I think I have that in my head that cannot fail. Where's Cynthia?

Mellef. In the garden.

Maskw. Let us go and consult her; my life for yours, I cheat my lord. [Exit.

Enter Lord and Lady Touchwood.

Lady Touchw. Maskwell your heir, and marry Cynthia!

Lord Touchw. I cannot do too much, for so much merit.

Lady Touchw. But this is a thing of too great moment to be so suddenly resolved. Why Cynthia? why must he be married? Is there not reward enough in raising his low fortune, but he must mix his blood with mine, and wed my niece? How know you that my brother will consent, or she? Nay, he himself perhaps may have affections elsewhere.

Lord Touchw. No, I am convinced he loves her.

Lady Touchw. Maskwell love Cynthia? impossible!

Lord Touchw. I tell you, he confessed it to me.

Lady Touchw. Confusion! How's this? [Aside.

Lord Touchw. His humility long stifled his passion; and his love of Mellefont would have made him still conceal it.—But, by encouragement, I wrung the secret from him; and know he's no way to be rewarded but with her. I'll defer my farther proceedings in it till you have considered it; but remember how we are both indebted to him. [Exit.

Lady Touchw. Both indebted to him! Yes, we are both indebted to him, if you knew all! Villain! Oh, I am wild with this surprise of treachery. It is impossible; it cannot be.—He love Cynthia! What! have I been assisting to his designs, his property only, a baiting-place! Now I see what made him false to Mellefont.—Shame and distraction! I cannot bear it. Oh! what woman can bear to be a property? To be kindled to a flame, only to light him to another's arms? Oh! that I were fire indeed, that I might burn the vile traitor! What shall I do? How shall I think? I cannot think.—All my designs are lost, my love unsated, my revenge unfinished, and fresh cause of fury from unthought-of plagues.

Enter Sir Paul Plyant.

Sir P. Plyant. Madam, sister, my lady sister, did you see my lady my wife?

Lady Touchw. Oh! torture!

Sir P. Plyant. Gads bud, I can't find her high nor low; where can she be, think you?

Lady Touchw. Where she's serving you as all your sex ought to be served; making you a beast. Don't you know that you're a fool, brother?

Sir P. Plyant. A fool? he, he, he! your merry—No, no, not I, I know no such matter.

Lady Touchw. Why then you don't know half your happiness.

Sir P. Plyant. That's a jest with all my heart, faith, and troth.—But harkye, my lord told me something of a revolution of things; I don't know what to make on't.—Gads bud, I must consult my wife—he talks of disinheriting his nephew: and I don't know what.—Look you, sister, I must know what my girl has to trust to: or not a syllable of a wedding, Gads bud!—to shew you that I am not a fool.

Lady Touchw. Hear me; consent to the breaking off this marriage, and the promoting any other, without consulting me, and I'll renounce all blood, all relation and concern, with you for ever—nay, I'll be your enemy, and pursue you to destruction; I'll tear your eyes out, and tread you under my feet.

Sir P. Plyant. Why, what's the matter now? Good Lord! what's all this for? Pooh, here's a joke indeed!—Why, where's my wife?

Lady Touchw. With Careless, in the close harbour: he may want you by this time, as much as you want her.

Sir P. Plyant. O, if she be with Mr. Careless, 'tis well enough.

Lady

Lady Touchw. Fool, sot, insensible ox!—But remember what I said to you, or you had better eat your own horns, by this light you had.

Sir P. Plyant. You're a passionate woman, Gads bud!—But, to say truth, all our family are cholerick; I am the only peaceable person amongst them. [Exeunt.]

Enter Mellefont, Maskwell, and Cynthia.

Mellef. I know no other way but this he has proposed; if you have love enough to run the venture.

Cynthia. I don't know whether I have love enough—but I find I have obstinacy enough to pursue whatever I have once resolved; and a true female courage to oppose any thing that resists my will, though 'twere reason itself.

Maskw. That's right.—Well, I'll secure the writings, and run the hazard along with you.

Cynthia. But how can the coach and six horses be got ready without suspicion?

Maskw. Leave it to my care; that shall be so far from being suspected, that it shall be got ready by my lord's own order.

Mellef. How?

Maskw. Why, I intend to tell my lord the whole matter of our contrivance: that's my way.

Mellef. I don't understand you.

Maskw. Why, I'll tell my lord, I laid this plot with you, on purpose to betray you; and that which put me upon it was, the finding it impossible to gain the lady any other way, but in the hopes of her marrying you.

Mellef. So—

Maskw. So? why so, while you're busied in making yourself ready, I'll wheedle her into the coach; and, instead of you, borrow my lord's chaplain, and so run away with her myself.

Mellef. O, I conceive you: you'll tell him so?

Maskw. Tell him so! ay; why you don't think I mean to do so?

Mellef. No, no; ha, ha! I dare swear thou wilt not.

Maskw. Therefore, for our farther security, I would have you disguised like a parson, that, if my lord should have curiosity to peep, he may not discover you in the coach, but think the cheat is carried on as he would have it.

Mellef. Excellent Maskwell! thou wert certainly meant for a statesman or a Jesuit—but thou art too honest for one, and too pious for the other.

Maskw. Well, get yourselves ready, and meet me in half an hour, yonder, in my lady's dressing room; go by the back stairs, and so we may slip down without being observed. I'll send the chaplain to you with his robes. I have made him my own—and ordered him to meet us to-morrow morning at St. Albans; there we will sum up this account to all our satisfactions.

Mellef. Should I begin to thank or praise thee, I should waste the little time we have. [Exit.]

Maskw. Madam, you will be ready?

Cynth. I will be punctual to the minute. [Going.]

Maskw. Stay, I have a doubt.—Upon second thoughts, we had better meet in the chaplain's chamber, here, the corner chamber at this end of the gallery; there is a back way into it, so that you need not come through this door—and a pair of private stairs leading down to the stables.—It will be more convenient.

Cynth. I am guided by you—but Mellefont will mistake.

Maskw. No, no, I'll after him immediately, and tell him.

Cynth. I will not fail. [Exit.]

Maskw. Why, qui vult decipi, decipiat.—'Tis no fault of mine, I have told them in plain terms, how easy it is for me to cheat them; and if they will not hear the serpent's hiss, they must be stung into experience, and future caution.—Now to prepare my lord to consent to this.—But first I must instruct my little levite; there is no plot, public or private, that can expect to prosper without one of them has a finger in it: he promised me to be within at this hour—Mr. Saygrace, Mr. Saygrace.

[goes to the chamber door and knocks.]

Saygrace. [looking out.] Sweet fir, I will but pen the last line of an acrostic, and be with you in the twinkling of of

of an ejaculation, in the pronouncing of an Amen, or before you can—

Maskw. Nay, good Mr. Saygrace, do not prolong the time, by describing to me the shortness of your stay; rather, if you please, defer the finishing of your wit, and let us talk about our business; it shall be thythes in your way.

Sayg. [enters.] You shall prevail—I would break off in the middle of a sermon to do you a pleasure.

Maskw. You could not do me a greater—except—the business in hand—Have you provided a habit for Mellefont?

Sayg. I have; they are ready in my chamber, together with a clean starched band and cuffs.

Maskw. Good, let them be carried to him—have you stitched the gown sleeve, that he may be puzzled, and waste time in putting it on?

Sayg. I have; the gown will not be indued without perplexity.

Maskw. Meet me in half an hour, here in your own chamber. When Cynthia comes, let there be no light, and do not speak, that she may not distinguish you from Mellefont. I'll urge haste, to excuse your silence.

Sayg. You have no more commands?

Maskw. None, your text is short.

Sayg. But pithy, and I will handle it with discretion.

Maskw. It will be the first you have so served.

[Exit Saygrace.]

Enter Lord Touchwood.

Lord Touchw. Sure I was born to be controlled by those I should command: my very slaves will shortly give me rules how I shall govern them,

Maskw. I am concerned to see your lordship discomposed.—

Lord Touchw. Have you seen my wife lately, or dis-obliged her?

Maskw. No, my lord. What can this mean! [aside.]

Lord Touchw. Then Mellefont has urged some body to incense her—Something she has heard of you which carries her beyond the bounds of patience.

Maskw. This I feared. [aside.] Did not your lordship tell her of the honours you designed me?

Lord Touchw. Yes.

Maskw. 'Tis that; you know my lady has a high spirit, she thinks I am unworthy.

Lord Touchw. Unworthy! 'Tis an ignorant pride in her to think so—Honesty to me is true nobility. However, it is my will it shall be so, and that should be convincing to her as much as reason—By heaven, I'll not be wife-ridden; were it possible, it should be done this night.

Maskw. By heaven, he meets my wishes. [aside.] Few things are impossible to willing minds.

Lord Touchw. Instruct me how this may be done; you shall see I want no inclination.

Maskw. I had laid a small design for to-morrow (as love will be inventing), which I thought to communicate to your lordship—But it may be as well done to-night.

Lord Touchw. Here's company—Come this way, and tell me. [Exeunt.]

Enter Careless and Cynthia.

Carel. Is not that he, now gone out with my lord?

Cynth. Yes.

Carel. By heaven, there's treachery.—The confusion that I saw your father in, my Lady Touchwood's passion, with what imperfectly I overheard between my lord and her, confirm me in my fears. Where's Mellefont?

Cynth. Here he comes.

Enter Mellefont.

Did Maskwell tell you any thing of the chaplain's chamber?

Mellef. No; my dear, will you get ready—the things are all in my chamber; I want nothing but the habit.

Carel. You are betrayed, and Maskwell is the villain I always thought him.

Cynth. When you were gone, he said his mind was changed, and bid me meet him in the chaplain's room, pretending immediately to follow you, and give you notice.

Mellef.

Mellef. How!

Carel. There's Saygrace tripping by with a bundle under his arm—He cannot be ignorant that Maskwell means to use his chamber; let's follow and examine him. [Exit.]

Mellef. 'Tis loss of time—I cannot think him false.

[Exit.]

Enter Lord Touchwood.

Cynth. My lord musing!

Lord Touchw. He has a quick invention, if this were suddenly designed—Yet he says he had prepared my chaplain already.

Cynth. How's this! Now I fear indeed.

Lord Touchw. Cynthia here! Alone, fair cousin, and melancholy?

Cynth. Your lordship was thoughtful.

Lord Touchw. My thoughts were on serious business, not worth your hearing.

Cynth. Mine were on treachery concerning you, and may be worth your hearing.

Lord Touchw. Treachery concerning me! Pray be plain—Hark! What noise!

Maskw. [within.] Will you not hear me?

Lady Touchw. [within.] No, monster! traitor! No.

Cynth. My lady and Maskwell! this may be lucky—My lord, let me intreat you to stand behind this screen, and listen; perhaps this chance may give you proof of what you never could have believed from my suspicions.

Enter Lady Touchwood with a dagger, and Maskwell:

Cynthia and Lord Touchwood listening.

Lady Touchw. You want but leisure to invent fresh falsehood, and sooth me to a fond belief of all your fictions; but I will stab the lie that's forming in your heart, and save a sin, in pity to your soul.

Maskw. Strike then—since you will have it so.

Lady Touchw. Ha! A steady villain to the last!

Maskw. Come, why do you dally with me thus?

Lady Touchw. Thy stubborn temper shocks me, and you knew it would—this is cunning all, and not courage; no, I know thee well; but thou shalt miss thy aim.

H 5

Maskw.

Maskw. Ha, ha, ha!

Lady Touchw. Ha! do you mock my rage? Then this shall punish your fond, rash contempt. Again smile! [goes to strike.] And such a smile as speaks in ambiguity! Ten thousand meanings lurk in each corner of that various face. O! that they were written in thy heart, that I, with this, might lay thee open to my fight! But then 'twill be too late to know—— Thou hast, thou hast found the only way to turn my rage; too well thou know'st my jealous soul could never bear uncertainty. Speak then, and tell me—Yet are you silent? Oh, I am wildered in all passions! but thus my anger melts. [weeps.] Here, take this poniard, for my very spirits faint, and I want strength to hold it; thou hast disarmed my soul.

[gives the dagger.]

Lord Touchw. Amazement shakes me!—where will this end?

Maskw. So, it is well—let your wild fury have a vent; and when you have temper, tell me.

Lady Touchw. Now, now, now I am calm, and can hear you.

Maskw. [aside.] Thanks, my invention! and now I have it for you—First, tell me what urged you to this violence? For your passion broke in such imperfect terms, that yet I am to learn the cause.

Lady Touchw. My lord himself surpris'd me with the news, you were to marry Cynthia—that you had owned your love to him, and his indulgence would assist you to attain your ends.

Cynth. How, my lord!

Lord Touchw. Pray forbear all resentments for a while, and let us hear the rest.

Maskw. I grant you, in appearance, all is true; I seem'd consenting to my lord; nay, transported with the blessing.—But could you think that I, who had been happy in your loved embraces, could ever be fond of an inferior slavery?

Lord Touchw. Ha! O poison to my ears! What do I hear?

Cynth.

Cynth. Nay, good my lord, forbear resentment, let us hear it out.

Lord Touchw. Yes, I will contain, tho' I could burst.

Maskw. I, that had wantoned in the rich circle of your world of love, could be confined within the puny province of a girl? No—Yet, though I dote on each last favour more than all the rest; though I would give a limb for every look you cheaply throw away on any other object of your love; yet so far I prize your pleasures over my own, that all this seeming plot that I have laid, has been to gratify your taste, and cheat the world, to prove a faithful rogue to you.

Lady Touchw. If this were true—But how can it be?

Maskw. I have so contrived, that Mellefont will presently, in the chaplain's habit, wait for Cynthia in your dressing-room: but I have put the change upon her, that she may be other-where employed.—Do you procure her night-gown, and, with your hoods tied over your face, meet him in her stead; you may go privately by the back stairs, and, unperceived, there you may propose to reinstate him in his uncle's favour, if he'll comply with your desires. His case is desperate, and I believe he'll yield to any conditions.—If not, here take this; you may employ it better, than in the heart of one who is nothing when not yours.

[gives the dagger.]

Lady Touchw. Thou canst deceive every body.—Nay, thou hast deceived me; but it is as I would wish. Trusty villain! I could worship thee.—

Maskw. No more.—It wants but a few minutes of the time; and Mellefont's love will carry him there before his hour.

Lady Touchw. I go, I fly, incomparable Maskwell!

[Exit.]

Maskw. So, this was a pinch indeed; my invention was upon the rack; and made discovery of her last plot. I hope Cynthia and my chaplain will be ready: I'll prepare for the expedition.

[Exit.]

Cynthia and Lord Touchwood come forward.

Cynth. Now, my lord!

H 6

Lord

Lord Touchw. Astonishment binds up my rage! Villainy upon villainy! Heavens, what a long track of dark deceit has this discovered! I am confounded when I look back, and want a clue to guide me through the various mazes of unheard-of treachery. My wife! Damnation! my hell!

Cynth. My lord, have patience; and be sensible how great our happiness is, that this discovery was not made too late.

Lord Touchw. I thank you; yet it may be still too late, if we don't presently prevent the execution of their plots.—Ha! I'll do it. Where is Mellefont, my poor injured nephew?—how shall I make him ample satisfaction?

Cynth. I dare answer for him.

Lord Touchw. I do him fresh wrong, to question his forgiveness; for I know him to be all goodness.—Yet my wife! Damn her.—She'll think to meet him in that dressing-room—was it not so? And Maskwell will expect you in the chaplain's chamber.—For once, I'll add my plot too.—Let us haste to find out, and inform my nephew; and do you, quickly as you can, bring all the company into this gallery.—I'll expose the strumpet and the villain. [Exeunt.

Enter Lord Froth, and Sir Paul Plyant.

Lord Froth. By heavens, I have slept an age.—Sir Paul, what o'clock is it? Past eight, on my conscience! My lady's is the most inviting couch; and a slumber there is the prettiest amusement!—But where's all the company?

Sir P. Pl. The company? Gads bud! I don't know, my lord; but here's the strangest revolution; all turned topsy turvy, as I hope for Providence.

Lord Froth. O heavens! what's the matter? where's my wife?

Sir P. Pl. All turned topsy turvy, as sure as a gun.

Lord Froth. How do you mean? my wife!

Sir P. Pl. The strangest posture of affairs!

Lord Froth. What, my wife?

Sir P. Pl. No, no, I mean the family.—Your lady's affairs affairs may be in a very good posture; I saw her go in to the garden with Mr. Brisk.

Lord Froth. How? where? when? what to do?

Sir P. Pl. I suppose they have been laying their heads together.

Lord Froth. How?

Sir P. Pl. Nay, only about poetry, I suppose, my lord; making couplets.

Lord Froth. Couplets!

Sir P. Pl. O, here they come.

Enter Lady Froth, and Brisk.

Brisk. My lord, your humble servant; Sir Paul, yours—the finest night!

Lady Froth. My dear, Mr. Brisk and I have been star-gazing, I don't know how long.

Sir P. Pl. Does it not tire your ladyship? are not you weary with looking up?

Lady Froth. Oh, no, I love it violently—My dear, you're melancholy.

Lord Froth. No, my dear; I'm but just awake.

Lady Froth. Snuff some of my spirit of hartshorn.

Lord Froth. I've some of my own, thank you, my dear.

Lady Froth. Well, I swear, Mr. Brisk, you understood astronomy like an old Egyptian.

Brisk. Not comparably to your ladyship; you are the very Cynthia of the skies, and queen of stars.

Lady Froth. That's because I have no light but what's by reflection from you, who are the sun.

Brisk. Madam, you have eclipsed me quite, let me perish.—I can't answer that.

Lady Froth. No matter—harkye, shall you and I make an Almanack together?

Brisk. With all my soul—your ladyship has made me the man in't already, I'm so full of the wounds which you have given.

Lady Froth. O finely taken! I swear now you are even with me. O Parnassus! you have an infinite deal of wit.

Sir P. Pl. So he has, Gads bud! and so has your ladyship.

158 THE DOUBLE DEALER.

Enter Lady Plyant, Careless, and Cynthia.

Lady Pl. You tell me most surprising things. Bless me, who would ever trust a man? O my heart akes for fear they should be all deceitful alike.

Carel. You need not fear, madam; you have charms to fix inconstancy itself.

Lady Pl. O dear, you make me blush.

Lord Froth. Come, my dear, shall we take leave of my lord and lady?

Cynth. They'll wait upon your lordship presently.

Lady Froth. Mr. Brisk, my coach shall set you down.

[A great shriek from the corner of the stage.]

All. What's the matter?

Lady Touchwood runs out affrighted; my lord after her, like a parson.

Lady Touchw. O, I'm betrayed.—Save me, help me!

Lord Touchw. Now, what evasion, strumpet?

Lady Touchw. Stand off, let me go.

Lord Touchw. Go, and thy own infamy pursue thee.—You stare as you were all amazed.—I don't wonder at it—but too soon you'll know mine, and that woman's shame.

Enter Mellefont disguised in a parson's habit, and pulling in Maskwell.

Mellef. Nay, by heaven you shall be seen.—Careless, your hand.—Do you hold down your head? Yes, I am your chaplain. Look in the face of your injured friend; thou wonder of all falsehood.

Lord Touchw. Are you silent, monster?

Mellef. Good heavens! how I believed and loved this man!—Take him hence, for he's a disease to my sight.

Lord Touchw. Secure that manifold villain.

[servants seize him.]

Carel. Miracle of ingratitude!

Brisk. This is all very surprising, let me perish.

Lady Froth. You know I told you Saturn looked a little more angry than usual.

Lord Touchw. We'll think of punishment at leisure; but let me hasten to do justice, in rewarding virtue and wronged wronged innocence.—Nephew, I hope I have your pardon, and Cynthia's.

Mellef. We are your lordship's creatures.

Lord Touchw. And be each other's comfort—Let me join your hands.—Unwearied nights and wishing days attend you both! Mutual love, lasting health, and circling joys, tread round each happy year of your long lives!

*Let secret villainy from hence be warn'd
Howe'er in private mischiefs are conceiv'd,
Torture and shame attend their open birth;
Like vipers in the womb, base treachery lies,
Still gnawing that whence first it did arise;
No sooner born, but the vile parent dies!*

[Exeunt omnes.]

E P I L O G U E.

Spoken by Mrs. MOUNTFORD.

COULD poets but foresee how plays would take,
 Then they could tell what Epilogues to make;
 Whether to thank or blame their audience most:
 But that late knowledge does much hazard cost;
 Till dice are thrown, there's nothing won, nor lost.
 So till the thief has stol'n, he cannot know
 Whether he shall escape the law, or no.
 But poets run much greater hazards far,
 Than they who stand their trials at the bar;
 The law provides a curb for its own fury,
 And suffers judges to direct the jury.
 But in this court, what difference does appear!
 For every one's both judge and jury here;
 Nay, and what's worse, an executioner!
 All have a right and title to some part,
 Each choosing that in which he has most art.
 The dreadful men of learning all confound,
 Unless the fable's good, and moral sound.
 The vizor masks, that are in pit and gallery,
 Approve, or damn, the repartee and raillery.
 The lady critics, who are better read,
 Inquire if characters are nicely bred;
 If the soft things are penn'd and spoke with grace:
 They judge of action too, and time, and place;
 In which we do not doubt but they're discerning,
 For that's a kind of assignation learning.
 Beaux judge of dress; the wittlings judge of songs;
 The cuckoldom, of ancient right, to cits belongs.
 Poor poets thus the favour are denied,
 Even to make exceptions, when they're tried.
 'Tis hard that they must every one admit:
 Methinks I see some faces in the pit,
 Which must of consequence be foes to wit.
 You who can judge, to sentence may proceed;
 But, though he cannot write, let him be freed
 At least from their contempt who cannot read.

A

COMEDY.

*Nudus agris, nudus nummis paternis,

Hor.

COMEDY

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

C H A R L E S,

Earl of Dorset and MIDDLESEX;

Lord Chamberlain of His Majesty's Household, and Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, &c.

MY LORD,

A Young poet is liable to the same vanity and indiscretion with a young lover; and the great man who smiles upon one, and the fine woman who looks kindly upon the other, are both of them in danger of having the favour published with the first opportunity.

But there may be a different motive, which will a little distinguish the offenders. For, though one should have a vanity in ruining another's reputation, yet the other other may only have an ambition to advance his own. And I beg leave, my Lord, that I may plead the latter, both as the cause and excuse of this Dedication.

Whoever is king, is also the father of his country; and as nobody can dispute your Lordship's Monarchy in Poetry; so all that are concerned ought to acknowledge your universal patronage: and it is only presuming on the privilege of a loyal subject, that I have ventured to make this my address of thanks to your Lordship; which at the same time includes a prayer for your protection.

I am not ignorant of the common form of poetical dedications, which are generally made up of panegyric, where the authors endeavour to distinguish their patrons, by the shining characters they give them, above other men. But that, my Lord, is not my business at this time; nor is your Lordship now to be distinguished. I am contented with the honour I do myself in this epistle; without the vanity of attempting to add to, or explain, your Lordship's character.

I confess, it is not without some struggling, that I behaved myself, in this case, as I ought: for it is very hard to be pleased with a subject, and yet forbear it. But I choose rather to follow Pliny's precept, than his example, when in his panegyric to the emperor Trajan, he says, Nec minus considerabo quid aures ejus pati possint, quam quid virtutibus debeatur.

I hope I may be excused the pedantry of a quotation, when it is so justly applied. Here are some lines in the print (and which your Lordship read before this play was acted) that were omitted on the stage; and particularly one whole scene in the third act, which not only helps the design forward with less precipitation, but also heightens the ridiculous character of Foresight, which indeed seems to be maimed without it. But I found myself in great danger of a long play, and was glad to help it where I could. Though, notwithstanding my care, and the kind reception it had from the town; I could heartily wish it yet shorter: but the number of different characters represented in it would have been too much crowded in less room.

This

DEDICATION.

165

This reflection on prolixity (a fault for which scarce any one beauty will atone) warns me not to be tedious now, and detain your Lordship any longer with the trifles of,

My LORD,

Your Lordship's

Most Obedient and

Most Humble Servant,

WILLIAM CONGREVE.

Spoken at the Opening of the New House,

By Mr. BETTERTON.

*THE husbandman in vain renews his toil,
 To cultivate each year a hungry soil;
 And fondly hopes for rich and generous fruit,
 When what should feed the tree devours the root:
 Th' unladen boughs, he sees, bode certain dearth,
 Unless transplanted to more kindly earth.
 So, the poor husbands of the stage, who found
 Their labours lost upon ungrateful ground,
 This last and only remedy have prov'd;
 And hope new fruit from ancient stocks remov'd.
 Well may they hope, when you so kindly aid,
 Well plant a soil, which you so rich have made.
 As Nature gave the world to man's first age,
 So from your bounty we receive this stage;
 The freedom man was born to, you've restor'd,
 And to our world such plenty you afford,
 It seems, like Eden, fruitful of its own accord.
 But since in Paradise frail flesh gave way,
 And when but two were made, both went astray;
 Forbear your wonder, and the fault forgive,
 If, in our larger family, we grieve
 One falling Adam, and one tempted Eve.
 We who remain would gratefully repay,
 What our endeavours can, and bring this day,
 The first-fruit offering of a virgin play:
 We hope there's something that may please each taste,
 And tho' of homely fare we make the feast,
 Yet you will find variety at least.*

There's

*There's humour, which for cheerful friends we got,
And for the thinking party there's a plot,
We've something too, to gratify ill-nature
(If there be any here)—and that is satire.
Tho' satire scarce dares grin, 'tis grown so mild,
Or only shews its teeth, as if it smil'd.
As asses thistles, poets mumble wit,
And dare not bite, for fear of being bit.
They hold their pens, as swords are held by fools,
And are afraid to use their own edge-tools.
Since the Plain Dealer's scenes of manly rage,
Not one has dar'd to lash this crying age.
This time, the poet owns the bold essay,
Yet hopes there's no ill-manners in his play:
And he declares by me, he has design'd
Affront to none; but frankly speaks his mind.
And, should th' ensuing scenes not chance to hit,
He offers but this one excuse—'twas writ
Before your late encouragement of wit,*

Spoken at the Opening of the New House,

By Mrs. BRACEGIRDLE.

SURE Providence at first design'd this place
 To be the player's refuge in distress;
 For still, in every storm, they all run hither,
 As to a shed, that shields them from the weather.
 But thinking of this change which last befel us,
 It's like what I have heard our poets tell us:
 For when behind our scenes their suits are pleading,
 To help their love, sometimes they shew their reading;
 And, wanting ready cash to pay for hearts,
 They top their learning on us, and their parts.
 Once of philosophers they told us stories,
 Whom, as I think, they called—Py—Pythagories,
 I'm sure 'tis some such Latin name they give them,
 And we, who know no better, must believe them.
 Now to these men (say they) such souls were given,
 That, after death, ne'er went to hell nor heaven,
 But liv'd, I know not how, in beasts; and then,
 When many years were past, in men again.
 Methinks, we players resemble such a soul,
 That, does from bodies; we, from houses stroll.
 Thus Aristotle's soul, of old that was,
 May now be damn'd to animate an ass;
 Or in this very house, for aught we know,
 Is doing painful penance in some beau:
 And thus, our audience, which did once resort
 To shining theatres, to see our sport,
 Now find us toss'd into a tennis court.
 These walls but t'other day were fill'd with noise
 Of roaring gamesters, and your damme boys;

Then

Then bounding balls and rackets they encompass;
 And now they're fill'd with jests, and flights, and bombast!
 I vow, I don't much like this transmigration,
 Strolling from place to place, by circulation;
 Grant Heaven, we don't return to our first station!
 I know not what these think; but, for my part,
 I can't reflect without an aching heart,
 How we should end in, our original, a cart.
 But we can't fear, since you're so good to save us,
 That you have only set us up to leave us.
 Thus, from the past, we hope for future grace,
 I beg it—
 And some here know I have a begging face.
 Then pray continue this your kind behaviour;
 For a clear stage won't do, without your favour.

The SCENE in LONDON.

LOVE FOR LOVE.

ACT I.

Valentine, in his Chamber, reading; Jeremy waiting.

Several Books upon the Table.

Val. JEREMY!

Jer. Sir.

Val. Here, take away; I'll walk a turn, and digest what I have read.—

Jer. You'll grow devilish fat upon this paper diet!

[aside, and taking away the books.]

Val. And, d'ye hear? go you to breakfast—There's a page doubled down in Epictetus, that is a feast for an emperor.

Jer. Was Epictetus a real cook, or did he only write receipts?

Val. Read, read, firrah, and refine your appetite; learn to live upon instruction; feast your mind, and mortify your flesh. Read, and take your nourishment in at your eyes; shut up your mouth, and chew the cud of understanding. So Epictetus advises.

Jer. O Lord! I have heard much of him, when I waited upon a gentleman at Cambridge. Pray what was that Epictetus?

Val. A very rich man—not worth a groat.

Jer. Humph! and so he has made a very fine feast, where there is nothing to be eaten.

Val. Yes.

Jer. Sir, you're a gentleman, and probably understand this fine feeding: but, if you please, I had rather be at board-wages. Does your Epictetus, or your Seneca here, or any of these poor rich rogues, teach you how to pay your debts without money? Will they shut up the mouths of your creditors? Will Plato be bail for you? or Diogenes, because he understands confinement, and lived in a tub, go to prison for you? *Slife, fir, what do you mean, to mew yourself up here with three or four musty books, in commendation of starving and poverty?

Val. Why, firrah, I have no money, you know it; and therefore resolve to rail at all that have: and in that I but follow the examples of the wisest and wittiest men in all ages—these poets and philosophers, whom you naturally hate, for just such another reason; because they abound in sense, and you are a fool.

Jer. Ay, fir, I am a fool, I know it: and yet, Heaven help me, I'm poor enough to be a wit.—But I was always a fool, when I told you what your expences would bring you to; your coaches and your liveries; your treats and your balls; your being in love with a lady that did not care a farthing for you in your prosperity; and keeping company with wits, that cared for nothing but your prosperity, and now when you are poor, hate you as much as they do one another.

Val. Well; and now I am poor, I have an opportunity to be revenged on them all; I'll pursue Angelica with more love than ever, and appear more notoriously her admirer in this restraint, than when I openly rivalled the rich fops that made court to her. So shall my poverty be a mortification to her pride, and perhaps make her compassionate the love, which has principally reduced me to this lowness of fortune. And for the wits, I'm sure I am in a condition to be even with them.

Jer. Nay, your condition is pretty even with theirs, that's the truth on't.

Val. I'll take some of their trade out of their hands.

Jer. Now Heaven of mercy continue the tax upon paper!—You don't mean to write?

Val. Yes, I do; I'll write a play.

Jer. Hem!—Sir, if you please to give me a small certificate of three lines—only to certify those whom it may concern, That the bearer hereof, Jeremy Fetch by name, has for the space of seven years truly and faithfully served Valentine Legend, Esquire; and that he is not now turned turned away for any misdemeanour; but does voluntarily dismiss his master from any future authority over him—

Val. No, sirrah; you shall live with me still.

Fer. Sir, it's impossible—I may die with you, starve with you, or be damned with your works: but to live, even three days, the life of a play, I no more expect it, than to be canonized for a muse after my decease.

Val. You are witty, you rogue, I shall want your help.—I'll have you learn to make couplets, to tag the ends of acts. D'ye hear? get the maids to crambo in an evening, and learn the knack of rhiming; you may arrive at the height of a song sent by an unknown hand, or a chocolate-house lampoon.

Fer. But, sir, is this the way to recover your father's favour? Why Sir Sampson will be irreconcilable. If your younger brother should come from sea, he'd never look upon you again. You're undone, sir; you're ruined; you won't have a friend left in the world, if you turn poet.—Ah, pox confound that Will's coffee-house, it has ruined more young men than the Royal Oak lottery!—Nothing thrives that belongs to it. The man of the house would have been an alderman by this time with half the trade, if he had set up in the city.—For my part, I never sit at the door, that I don't get double the stomach that I do at a horse-race. The air upon Banstead Downs is nothing to it for a whetter; yet I never see it, but the spirit of famine appears to me—sometimes like a decayed porter, worn out with pimping, and carrying billet-doux and songs; not like other porters for hire, but for the jest's sake.—Now like a thin chairman, melted down to half his proportion, with carrying a poet upon tick, to visit some great fortune; and his fare to be paid him, like the wages of sin, either at the day of marriage, or the day of death.

Val. Very well, sir; can you proceed?

Fer. Sometimes like a bilked bookseller, with a meagre terrified countenance, that looks as if he had written for himself, or were resolved to turn author, and bring the rest of his brethren into the same condition. And lastly, in the form of a worn-out punk, with verses in her hand, which her vanity had preferred to settlements, without a whole tatter to her tail, but as ragged as one of the muses; or as if she were carrying her linen to the paper-mill, to be converted into folio books of warning to all young maids, not to prefer poetry to good sense; or lying in the arms of a needy wit, before the embraces of a wealthy fool.

Enter Scandal.

Scand. What! Jeremy holding forth?

Val. The rogue has (with all the wit he could muster up) been declaiming against wit.

Scand. Ay? Why then I'm afraid Jeremy has wit for wherever it is, it's always contriving its own ruin.

Jer. Why so I have been telling my master, sir. Mr. Scandal, for heaven's sake, sir, try if you can dissuade him from turning poet.

Scand. Poet! He shall turn soldier first, and rather depend upon the outside of his head, than the lining! Why, what the devil! has not your poverty made your enemies enough? must you needs shew your wit to get more?

Jer. Ay, more indeed: for who cares for any body that has more wit than himself?

Scand. Jeremy speaks like an oracle. Don't you see how worthless great men and dull rich rogues avoid a witty man of small fortune? Why, he looks like a writ of inquiry into their titles and estates; and seems commissioned by Heaven to seize the better half.

Val. Therefore I would rail in my writings, and be revenged.

Scand. Rail! at whom? the whole world? Impotent and vain! Who would die a martyr to sense, in a country where the religion is folly? You may stand at bay for a while; but, when the full cry is against you, you sha'n't have fair play for your life. If you can't be fairly run down by the hounds, you will be treacherously shot by the huntsmen.—No, turn pimp, flatterer, quack, lawyer, parson, be chaplain to an atheist, or stallion to an old woman, any thing but poet. A modern poet is worse, more servile, timorous, and fawning, than any I have named: without you could retrieve the ancient honours of the name, recal the stage of Athens, and be allowed the force of open honest satire.

Val. You are as inveterate against our poets, as if your character character had been lately exposed upon the stage.—Nay, I am not violently bent upon the trade.—[one knocks.] Jeremy, see who's there. [Jer. goes to the door.]—But tell me what you would have me do?—What do the world say of me, and my forced confinement?

Scand. The world behaves itself, as it uses to do on such occasions. Some pity you, and condemn your father: others excuse him, and blame you. Only the ladies are merciful, and wish you well: since love and pleasurable expence have been your greatest faults.

Jeremy returns.

Val. How now?

Jer. Nothing new, sir. I have dispatched some half a dozen duns with as much dexterity as an hungry judge does causes at dinner-time.

Val. What answer have you given them?

Scand. Patience, I suppose—the old receipt!

Jer. No, faith, sir: I have put them off so long with patience and forbearance, and other fair words, that I was forced to tell them in plain downright English—

Val. What?

Jer. That they should be paid.

Val. When?

Jer. To-morrow.

Val. And how the devil do you mean to keep your word?

Jer. Keep it? Not at all: it has been so very much stretched, that I reckon it will break of course by to-morrow, and nobody be surpris'd at the matter!—[knocking.]—Again! Sir, if you don't like my negociation, will you be pleas'd to answer these yourself?

Val. See who they are. [Exit Jeremy.] By this, Scandal, you may see what it is to be great. Secretaries of state, presidents of the council, and generals of an army, lead just such a life as I do; have just such crowds of visitants in a morning, all soliciting of past promises; which are but a civiler sort of duns, that lay claim to voluntary debts.

Scand. And you, like a truly great man, having engaged their attendance, and promised more than ever you intended to perform, are more perplexed to find evasions, than you would be to invent the honest means of keeping your word, and gratifying your creditors.

Val. Scandal, learn to spare your friends, and do not provoke your enemies. This liberty of your tongue will one day bring a confinement on your body, my friend.

Enter Jeremy.

Jer. O, sir, there's Trapland the scrivener, with two suspicious fellows like lawful pads, that would knock a man down with pocket-tipstaves!—And there's your father's steward; and the nurse, with one of your children, from Twit'nam.

Val. Pox on her! could she find no other time to fling my sins in my face? Here! give her this, [gives money] and bid her trouble me no more; a thoughtless, two-handed whore! She knows my condition well enough, and might have over-laid the child a fortnight ago, if she had had any forecast in her.

Scand. What, is it bouncing Margery, with my godson?

Jer. Yes, sir.

Scand. My blessing to the boy, with this token [gives money] of my love. And (d'ye hear?) bid Margery put more flocks in her bed, shift twice a week, and not work so hard, that she may not smell so vigorously.—I shall take the air shortly.

Val. Scandal, don't spoil my boy's milk.—Bid Trapland come in. If I can give that Cerberus a sop, I shall be at rest for one day.

[Jeremy goes out and brings in Trapland.]

Val. O Mr. Trapland! my old friend! welcome.—Jeremy, a chair quickly: a bottle of sack and a toast—fly—a chair first.

Trapl. A good morning to you, Mr. Valentine; and to you, Mr. Scandal.

Scand. The morning's a very good morning, if you don't spoil it.

Val. Come, sit you down; you know his way.

Trapl. [sits.] There is a debt, Mr. Valentine, of fifteen hundred pounds, of pretty long standing—

Val.

Val. I cannot talk about business with a thirsty palate.
—Sirrah! the sack!

Trapl. And I desire to know what course you have taken for the payment.

Val. Faith and troth, I am heartily glad to see you—my service to you! fill, fill, to honest Mr. Trapland—fuller!

Trapl. Hold! sweetheart—this is not to our business.—My service to you, Mr. Scandal!—[drinks]—I have forborn as long—

Val. T'other glass, and then we'll talk—Fill, Jeremy.

Trapl. No more, in truth—I have forborn, I say—

Val. Sirrah! fill! when I bid you.—And how does your handsome daughter?—Come, a good husband to her! [drinks.]

Trapl. Thank you—I have been out of this money—

Val. Drink first. Scandal, why do you not drink? [they drink.]

Trapl. And, in short, I can be put off no longer.

Val. I was much obliged to you for your supply: it did me signal service in my necessity. But you delight in doing good. Scandal, drink to me, my friend Trapland's health. An honest man lives not, nor one more ready to serve his friend in distress; though I say it to his face. Come, fill each man his glass.

Scand. What? I know Trapland has been a whore-master, and loves a wench still. You never knew a whore-master, that was not an honest fellow.

Trapl. Fie, Mr. Scandal, you never knew!—

Scand. What don't I know?—I know the buxom black widow in the Poultry—Eight hundred pounds a year jointure, and twenty thousand pounds in money. Ahah! old Trap!

Val. Say you so, i'faith? Come, we'll remember the widow: I know whereabouts you are; come, to the widow.

Trapl. No more indeed.

Val. What! the widow's health? Give it him—off with it. [they drink.]—A lovely girl, i'faith, black sparkling eyes, soft pouting ruby lips! Better sealing there, than a bond for a million, ha!

I 5

Trapl.

Trapl. No, no, there's no such thing; we'd better mind our business—You're a wag!

Val. No, faith, we'll mind the widow's business: fill again.—Pretty round heaving breasts,—a Barbary shape, and a jut with her bum, would stir an Anchorite; and the prettiest foot! Oh, if a man could but fasten his eyes to her feet; as they steal in and out, and play at bo-peep under her petticoats—ha! Mr. Trapland?

Trapl. Verily, give me a glass—you're a wag—and here's to the widow. [drinks.]

Scand. He begins to chuckle—ply him close, or he'll elapse into a dun.

Enter Officer.

Officer. By your leave, gentlemen.—Mr. Trapland, if we must do our office, tell us.—We have half a dozen gentlemen to arrest in Pall Mall and Covent Garden; and if we don't make haste, the chairmen will be abroad, and block up the chocolate-houses; and then our labour's lost.

Trapl. Odso, that's true. Mr. Valentine, I love mirth; but business must be done; are you ready to—

Jer. Sir, your father's steward says, he comes to make proposals concerning your debts.

Val. Bid him come in: Mr. Trapland, send away your officer; you shall have an answer presently.

Trapl. Mr. Snap, stay within call. [Exit Officer.]

Enter Steward, who whispers Valentine.

Scand. Here's a dog now, a traitor in his wine! Sirrah, refund the sack: Jeremy, fetch him some warm water; or I'll rip up his stomach, and go the shortest way to his conscience.

Trapl. Mr. Scandal, you are uncivil. I did not value your sack; but you cannot expect it again, when I have drunk it.

Scand. And how do you expect to have your money again, when a gentleman has spent it?

Val. You need say no more. I understand the conditions; they are very hard, but my necessity is very pressing: I agree to them. Take Mr. Trapland with you, and let him draw the writing.—Mr. Trapland, you know this man; he shall satisfy you.

Trapl. Sincerely, I am loth to be thus pressing ; but my necessity—

Val. No apology, good Mr. Scrivener ; you shall be paid.

Trapl. I hope you forgive me ; my business requires—[Exeunt Trapland, Steward, and Jeremy.

Scand. He begs pardon like a hangman at an execution.

Val. But I have got a reprieve.

Scand. I am surpris'd ; what, does your father relent ?

Val. No ; he has sent me the hardest conditions in the world. You have heard of a booby brother of mine, that was sent to sea three years ago ? This brother, my father hears, is landed ; whereupon he very affectionately sends me word, “ If I will make a deed of conveyance of my right to his estate after his death to my younger brother, he will immediately furnish me with four thousand pounds, to pay my debts, and make my fortune.” This was once propos'd before, and I refused it ; but the present impatience of my creditors for their money, and my own impatience of confinement, and absence from Angelica, force me to consent.

Scand. A very desperate demonstration of your love to Angelica ! and I think she has never given you any assurance of hers.

Val. You know her temper ; she never gave me any great reason either for hope or despair.

Scand. Women of her airy temper, as they seldom think before they act, so they rarely give us any light to guess at what they mean : but you have little reason to believe that a woman of this age, who has had an indifference for you in your prosperity, will fall in love with your ill fortune. Besides, Angelica has a great fortune of her own ; and great fortunes either expect another great fortune, or a fool.

Enter Jeremy.

Jer. More misfortunes, sir.

Val. What, another dun ?

Jer. No, sir ; but Mr. Tattle is come to wait upon you.

Val. Well, I cannot help it—you must bring him up; he knows I don't go abroad. [Exit Jer.]

Scand. Pox on him, I'll be gone.

Val. No, pr'ythee stay: Tattle and you should never be afunder; you are light and shadow, and shew one another. He is perfectly thy reverse both in humour and understanding; and as you set up for defamation, he is a mender of reputations.

Scand. A mender of reputations! ay, just as he is a keeper of secrets, another virtue that he sets up for in the same manner. For the rogue will speak aloud in the posture of a whisper; and deny a woman's name, while he gives you the marks of her person. He will forswear receiving a letter from her, and at the same time shew you her hand in the superscription: and yet perhaps he has counterfeited her hand too, and sworn to a truth; but he hopes not to be believed; and refuses the reputation of a lady's favour, as a doctor says no to a bishoprick, only that it may be granted him.—In short, he is a public professor of secrecy, and makes proclamation that he holds private intelligence.—He is here.

Enter Tattle.

Tatt. Valentine, good morrow: Scandal, I am yours—that is, when you speak well of me.

Scand. That is, when I am yours; for while I am my own, or any body's else, that will never happen.

Tatt. How inhuman!

Val. Why, Tattle, you need not be much concerned at any thing that he says: for to converse with Scandal, is to play at Losing Loadum; you must lose a good name to him, before you can win it for yourself.

Tatt. But how barbarous that is, and how unfortunate for him, that the world shall think the better of any person for his calumnation!—I thank Heaven, it has always been a part of my character, to handle the reputations of others very tenderly indeed.

Scand. Ay, such rotten reputations as you have to deal with are to be handled tenderly indeed.

Tatt. Nay, why rotten? why should you say rotten, when you know not the persons of whom you speak? How cruel that is!

Scand.

Scand. Not know them? Why, thou never hadst to do with any body that did not stink to all the town.

Tatt. Ha, ha, ha! nay, now you make a jest of it indeed. For there is nothing more known, than that nobody knows any thing of that nature of me. As I hope to be saved, Valentine, I never exposed a woman, since I knew what woman was.

Val. And yet you have conversed with several?

Tatt. To be free with you, I have—I don't care if I own that—nay, more (I'm going to say a bold word now), I never could meddle with a woman that had to do with any body else.

Scand. How!

Val. Nay, faith, I'm apt to believe him—except her husband, Tattle.

Tatt. Oh that—

Scand. What think you of that noble commoner, Mrs. Drab?

Tatt. Pooh, I know Madam Drab has made her brags in three-or four places, that I said this and that, and writ to her, and did I know not what—but, upon my reputation, she did me wrong—well, well, that was malice—but I know the bottom of it. She was bribed to that by one we all know—a man too—only to bring me into disgrace with a certain woman of quality—

Scand. Whom we all know.

Tatt. No matter for that—Yes, yes, every body knows—no doubt on't, every body knows my secrets!—But I soon satisfied the lady of my innocence; for I told her—Madam, says I, there are some persons who make it their business to tell stories, and say this and that of one and the other, and every thing in the world; and, says I, if your grace—

Scand. Grace!

Tatt. O Lord, what have I said?—My unlucky tongue!

Val. Ha, ha, ha!

Scand. Why, Tattle, thou hast more impudence than one can in reason expect: I shall have an esteem for thee—well, and ha, ha, ha! well, go on, and what did you say to her grace?

Val. I confess, this is something extraordinary.

Tatt. Not a word, as I hope to be saved; an arrant lapsus linguae!—Come, let us talk of something else.

Val. Well, but how did you acquit yourself?

Tatt. Pooh, pooh, nothing at all, I only rallied with you.—A woman of ordinary rank was a little jealous of me, and I told her something or other—faith, I know not what.—Come, let's talk of something else.

[hums a song.]

Scand. Hang him, let him alone; he has a mind we should inquire.

Tatt. Valentine, I supped last night with your mistress, and her uncle old Foresight: I think your father lies at Foresight's.

Val. Yes.

Tatt. Upon my soul, Angelica's a fine woman.—And so is Mrs. Foresight, and her sister Mrs. Frail.

Scand. Yes, Mrs. Frail is a very fine woman; we all know her.

Tatt. Oh, that is not fair.

Scand. What?

Tatt. To tell.

Scand. To tell what? Why, what do you know of Mrs. Frail?

Tatt. Who I? Upon honour I don't know whether she be man or woman; but by the smoothness of her chin, and roundness of her hips.

Scand. No!

Tatt. No.

Scand. She says otherwise.

Tatt. Impossible!

Scand. Yes, faith. Ask Valentine else.

Tatt. Why then, as I hope to be saved, I believe a woman only obliges a man to secrecy, that she may have the pleasure of telling herself.

Scand. No doubt on it. Well, but has she done you wrong, or no? You have had her? ha?

Tatt. Though I have more honour than to tell first; I have more manners than to contradict what a lady has declared.

Scand. Well, you own it?

Tatt.

Tatt. I am strangely surpris'd! Yes, yes, I cannot deny it, if she taxes me with it.

Scand. She'll be here by and by; she sees Valentine every morning.

Tatt. How!

Val. She does me the favour—I mean, of a visit sometimes. I did not think she had granted more to any body.

Scand. Nor I, faith.—But Tattle does not use to belie a lady; it is contrary to his character.—How one may be deceived in a woman, Valentine!

Tatt. Nay, what do you mean, gentlemen?

Scand. I'm resolv'd I'll ask her.

Tatt. O barbarous! Why did you not tell me—

Scand. No, you told us.

Tatt. And bid me ask Valentine?

Val. What did I say? I hope you won't bring me to confess an answer, when you never asked me the question!

Tatt. But, gentlemen, this is the most inhuman proceeding.—

Val. Nay, if you have known Scandal thus long, and cannot avoid such a palpable decoy as this was; the ladies have a fine time, whose reputations are in your keeping.

Enter Jeremy.

Jer. Sir, Mrs. Frail has sent, to know if you are stirring.

Val. Shew her up when she comes. [Exit Jer.]

Tatt. I'll be gone.

Val. You'll meet her.

Tatt. Is there not a back way?

Val. If there were, you have more discretion than to give Scandal such an advantage; why, your running away will prove all that he can tell her.

Tatt. Scandal, you will not be so ungenerous—O, I shall lose my reputation of secrecy for ever.—I shall never be received but upon public days; and my visits will never be admitted beyond a drawing-room: I shall never see a bed-chamber again, never be locked in a closet, nor run behind a screen, or under a table; never be distinguished guished among the waiting women by the name of trusty Mr. Tattle more.—You will not be so cruel?

Val. Scandal, have pity on him; he'll yield to any conditions.

Tatt. Any, any terms.

Scand. Come then, sacrifice half a dozen women of good reputation to me presently.—Come, where are you familiar?—And see that they are women of quality too, the first quality.

Tatt. 'Tis very hard.—Won't a baronet's lady pass?

Scand. No, nothing under a right honourable.

Tatt. O inhuman! You don't expect their names?

Scand. No, their titles shall serve.

Tatt. Alas, that is the same thing. Pray spare me their titles; I'll describe their persons.

Scand. Well, begin then. But take notice, if you are so ill a painter, that I cannot know the person by your picture of her, you must be condemned, like other bad painters, to write the name at the bottom.

Tatt. Well, first then——

Enter Mrs. Frail.

O unfortunate! she's come already. Will you have patience till another time?—I'll double the number.

Scand. Well, on that condition—Take heed you don't fail me.

Mrs. F. I shall get a fine reputation, by coming to see fellows in a morning! Scandal, you devil, are you here too? Oh, Mr. Tattle, every thing is safe with you, we know.

Scand. Tattle!

Tatt. Mum——O, madam, you do me too much honour.

Val. Well, lady Galloper, how does Angelica?

Mrs. F. Angelica?—Manners!

Val. What, you will allow an absent lover—

Mrs. F. No, I'll allow a lover present with his mistress to be particular—but otherwise I think his passion ought to give place to his manners.

Val. But what if he has more passion than manners?

Mrs.

Mrs. F. Then let him marry, and reform.

Val. Marriage indeed may qualify the fury of his passion; but it very rarely mends a man's manners.

Mrs. F. You are the most mistaken in the world: there is no creature perfectly civil, but a husband: for in a little time he grows only rude to his wife; and that is the highest good-breeding, for it begets his civility to other people. Well, I'll tell you news; but, I suppose, you hear your brother Benjamin is landed. And my brother Foresight's daughter is come out of the country—I assure you, there's a match talked of by the old people.—Well, if he be but as great a sea beast, as she is a land monster, we shall have a most amphibious breed—the progeny will be all otters: he has been bred at sea, and she has never been out of the country.

Val. Pox take them! their conjunction bodes me no good, I'm sure.

Mrs. F. Now you talk of conjunction, my brother Foresight has cast both their nativities, and prognosticates an admiral and an eminent justice of the peace to be the issue male of their two bodies. 'Tis the most superstitious old fool! He would have persuaded me, that this was an unlucky day, and would not let me come abroad: but I invented a dream, and sent him to Artemidorus for interpretation, and so stole out to see you. Well, and what will you give me now? Come, I must have something.

Val. Step into the next room—and I'll give you something.

Scand. Ay, we'll all give you something.

Mrs. F. Well, what will you give me?

Val. Mine's a secret.

Mrs. F. I thought you would give me something that would be a trouble to you to keep.

Val. And Scandal shall give you a good name.

Mrs. F. That's more than he has for himself. And what will you give me, Mr. Tattle?

Tatt. I? My soul, madam.

Mrs. F. Pooch, no, I thank you, I have enough to do to take care of my own. Well; but I'll come and see you you one of these mornings: I hear, you have a great many pictures.

Tatt. I have a pretty good collection, at your service; some originals.

Scand. Hang him, he has nothing but the Seasons and the Twelve Cæsars, paltry copies; and the Five Senses, as ill represented as they are in himself: and he himself is the only original you will see there.

Mrs. F. Ay, but I hear he has a closet of beauties.

Scand. Yes, all that have done him favours, if you will believe him.

Mr. F. Ay, let me see those, Mr. Tattle.

Tatt. Oh, madam, those are sacred to love and contemplation. No man but the painter and myself was ever blest with the sight.

Mrs. F. Well, but a woman—

Tatt. Nor woman, till she consented to have her picture there too—for then she is obliged to keep the secret.

Scand. No, no; come to me if you'd see pictures.

Mrs. F. You?

Scand. Yes, faith, I can shew you your own picture; and most of your acquaintance, to the life, and as like as at Kneller's.

Mrs. F. O lying creature!—Valentine, does not he lie?—I can't believe a word he says.

Val. No, indeed, he speaks truth now: for, as Tattle has pictures of all that have granted him favours, he has the pictures of all that have refused him—if satires, descriptions, characters, and lampoons, are pictures.

Scand. Yes, mine are most in black and white—and yet there are some set out in their true colours, both men and women. I can shew you pride, folly, affectation, wantonness, inconstancy, covetousness, dissimulation, malice, and ignorance, all in one piece. Then I can shew you lying, foppery, vanity, cowardice, bragging, lechery, impotence, and ugliness, in another piece; and yet one of these is a celebrated beauty, and t'other a professed beau. I have paintings too, some pleasant enough.

Mrs. F. Come, let's hear them.

Scand.

Scand. Why, I have a beau in a bagnio, cupping for a complexion, and sweating for a shape.

Mrs. F. So!

Scand. Then I have a lady burning brandy in a cellar with a hackney-coachman.

Mrs. F. O devil! Well, but that story is not true.

Scand. I have some hieroglyphicks too. I have a lawyer, with a hundred hands, two heads, and but one face; a divine, with two faces, and one head; and I have a foldier, with his brains in his belly, and his heart where his head should be.

Mr. F. And no head?

Scand. No head.

Mrs. F. Pooh, this is all invention. Have you never a poet?

Scand. Yes, I have a poet, weighing words, and selling praise for praise; and a critic picking his pocket. I have another large piece too, representing a school; where there are huge-proportioned critics, with long wigs, laced coats, Steinkirk cravats, and terrible faces; with catcalls in their hands, and horn-books about their necks. I have many more of this kind, very well painted, as you shall see.

Mrs. F. Well, I'll come, if it be but to disprove you.

Enter Jeremy.

Jer. Sir, here's the steward again from your father.

Val. I'll come to him.—Will you give me leave? I'll wait on you again presently.

Mrs. F. No, I'll be gone. Come, who squires me to the Exchange? I must call on my sister Foresight there.

Scand. I will: I have a mind to your sister.

Mrs. F. Civil!

Tatt. I will; because I have a tendre for your ladyship.

Mrs. F. That's somewhat the better reason, to my opinion.

Scand. Well, if Tattle entertains you, I have the better opportunity to engage your sister.

Val. Tell Angelica, I am about making hard conditions, to come abroad, and be at liberty to see her.

Scand. I'll give an account of you and your proceedings. If indiscretion be a sign of love, you are the most a lover

a lover of any body that I know. You fancy that parting with your estate will help you to your mistress.—In my mind, he is a thoughtless adventurer,

*Who hopes to purchase wealth by selling land;
Or win a mistress with a losing hand.*

[Exeunt.]

End of the First Act.

A C T II.

A Room in Foresight's House.

Enter Foresight and Servant.

For. H EY-DAY! What, are all the women of my family abroad? Is not my wife come home? nor my sister? nor my daughter?

Serv. No, sir.

For. Mercy on us! what can be the meaning of it? Sure the moon is in all her fortitudes! Is my niece Angelica at home?

Serv. Yes, sir.

For. I believe you lie, sir.

Serv. Sir?

For. I say, you lie, sir. It is impossible that any thing should be as I would have it; for I was born, sir, when the crab was ascending; and all my affairs go backward.

Serv. I can't tell indeed, sir.

For. No, I know you can't, sir. But I can tell, and foretell, sir.

Enter Nurse.

For. Nurse, where's your young mistress?

Nurse. Wee'll heart! I know not, they're none of them come home yet. Poor child, I warrant she's fond of seeing the town!—Marry, pray Heaven they have given her any dinner!—Good lack-a-day, ha, ha, ha! O strange; I'll vow and swear now, ha, ha, ha! marry, and did you ever see the like?

For. Why, how now? what's the matter?

Nurse.

Nurse. Pray Heaven send your worship good luck! marry, and amen, with all my heart! for you have put on one stocking with the wrong side outward.

For. Ha, how? Faith and troth, I'm glad of it: and so I have; that may be good luck in troth; in troth it may, very good luck: nay I have had some omens. I got out of bed backwards too this morning, without premeditation; pretty good that too. But then I stumbled coming down stairs, and met a weasel; bad omens those! Some bad, some good; our lives are checquered: Mirth and sorrow, want and plenty, night and day, make up our time.—But, in troth, I am pleased at my stocking—very well pleased at my stocking!—Oh, here's my niece!—Sirrah, go tell Sir Sampson Legend I'll wait on him if he's at leisure.—'Tis now three o'clock, a very good hour for business; Mercury governs this hour.

[Exit Servant.]

Enter Angelica,

Ang. Is it not a good hour for pleasure too, uncle? Pray lend me your coach; mine's out of order.

For. What, would you be gadding too? Sure all females are mad to-day.—It is of evil portent, and bodes mischief to the master of a family.—I remember an old prophecy, written by Messahalah the Arabian, and thus translated by a reverend Buckinghamshire bard:

*When housewives all the house forsake,
And leave good men to brew and bake,
Withouten guile, then be it said,
That house doth stand upon its head;
And when the head is set in ground,
No mar'l, if it be fruitful found.*

Fruitful, the head fruitful: that bodes horns; the fruit of the head is horns!—Dear niece, stay at home—for by the head of the house is meant the husband; the prophecy needs no explanation.

Ang. Well, but I can neither make you a cuckold, uncle, by going abroad; nor secure you from being one, by staying at home.

For. Yes, yes; while there's one woman left, the prophecy is not in full force.

Ang.

Ang. But my inclinations are in force. I have a mind to go abroad; and if you won't lend me your coach, I'll take a hackney, or a chair; and leave you to erect a scheme, and find who's in conjunction with your wife. Why don't you keep her at home, if you're jealous of her when she's abroad? You know my aunt is a little retrograde (as you call it) in her nature. Uncle, I'm afraid you are not lord of the ascendant! ha, ha, ha!

For. Well, jill-flirt, you are very pert—and always ridiculing that celestial science.

Ang. Nay, uncle, don't be angry.—If you are, I'll reap up all your false prophecies, ridiculous dreams, and idle divinations. I'll swear, you are a nuisance to the neighbourhood.—What a bustle did you keep against the last invisible eclipse, laying in provision as it were for a siege! What a world of fire and candle, matches and tinderboxes, did you purchase! One would have thought we were ever after to live under ground; or at least making a voyage to Greenland, to inhabit there all the dark season.

For. Why, you malapert flut!

Ang. Will you lend me your coach? or I'll go on.—Nay, I'll declare how you prophesied popery was coming, only because the butler had mislaid some of the apostle spoons, and thought they were lost. Away went religion and spoon-meat together!—Indeed, uncle, I'll indite you for a wizard.

For. How, huffy! was there ever such a provoking minx?

Nurse. O merciful father, how she talks!

Ang. Yes, I can make oath of your unlawful midnight practices; you and the old nurse there.

Nurse. Marry, Heaven defend!—I at midnight practices!—O Lord, what's here to do?—I in unlawful doings with my master's worship!—Why, did you ever hear the like now?—Sir, did ever I do any thing of your midnight concerns—but warm your bed, and tuck you up, and set the candle and your tobacco-box and your urinal by you, and now and then rub the soles of your feet?—O Lord, I!—

Ang. Yes, I saw you together, through the key-hole.

of the closet, one night, like Saul and the witch of Endor, turning the sieve and sheers, and pricking your thumbs, to write poor innocent servants names in blood, about a little nutmeg-grater, which she had forgot in the caudle-cup.—Nay, I know something worse, if I would speak of it!

For. I defy you, hussy; but I'll remember this. I'll be revenged on you, cockatrice; I'll hamper you—You have your fortune in your own hands—but I'll find a way to make your lover, your prodigal spendthrift gallant, Valentine, pay for all, I will.

Ang. Will you? I care not; but all shall out then.—Look to it, Nurse; I can bring witness that you have a great unnatural teat under your left arm, and he another; and that you suckle a young devil, in the shape of a tabby cat, by turns; I can.

Nurse. A teat, a teat, I an unnatural teat! O the false slanderous thing! Feel, feel here, if I have any thing but like another christian! [crying.]

For. I will have patience, since it is the will of the stars I should be thus tormented—this is the effect of the malicious conjunctions and oppositions in the third house of my nativity; there the curse of kindred was foretold.—But I will have my doors locked up—I'll punish you; not a man shall enter my house.

Ang. Do, uncle, lock them up quickly, before my aunt comes home—you'll have a letter for alimony to-morrow morning!—But let me be gone first; and then let no mankind come near the house: but converse with spirits and the celestial signs, the bull, and the ram, and the goat. Bless me, there are a great many horned beasts among the twelve signs, uncle! But cuckolds go to heaven!

For. But there's but one virgin among the twelve signs, spit-fire!—but one virgin!

Ang. Nor there had not been that one, if she had had to do with any thing but astrologers, uncle! That makes my aunt go abroad.

For. How! how! is that the reason? Come, you know something; tell me, and I'll forgive you; do, good niece.—Come, you shall have my coach and horses —faith

—faith and troth, you shall.—Does my wife complain? Come, I know women tell one another.—She is young and sanguine, has a wanton hazel eye, and was born under Gemini, which may incline her to society; she has a mole upon her lip, with a moist palm, and an open liberality on the mount of Venus.

Ang. Ha, ha, ha!

For. Do you laugh?—Well, gentlewoman, I'll—But come, be a good girl, don't perplex your poor uncle! Tell me—won't you speak? Odd, I'll—

Enter Servant.

Serv. Sir Sampson is coming down, to wait upon you, sir. [Exit.]

Ang. Good b'ye, uncle.—Call me a chair.—I'll find out my aunt, and tell her, she must not come home.

[Exit.]

For. I am so perplexed and vexed, I am not fit to receive him; I shall scarce recover myself before the hour be past. Go, Nurse; tell Sir Sampson, I'm ready to wait on him.

Nurse. Yes, sir.

[Exit.]

For. Well—why, if I was born to be a cuckold, there's no more to be said!—He is here already.

Enter Sir Sampson Legend with a paper.

Sir S. Nor no more to be done, old boy; that is plain—here it is, I have it in my hand, old Ptolemy; I'll make the ungracious prodigal know who begat him; I will, old Nostrodamus. What, I warrant, my son thought nothing belonged to a father, but forgiveness and affection; no authority, no correction, no arbitrary power—nothing to be done, but for him to offend, and me to pardon! I warrant you, if he danced till doomsday, he thought I was to pay the piper. Well, but here it is under black and white, signatum, sigillatum, and deliberatum—that, as soon as my son Benjamin is arrived, he is to make over to him his right of inheritance. Where's my daughter that is to be—ha! old Merlin? Body of me, I'm so glad I'm revenged on this undutiful rogue!

For. Odds, let me see; let me see the paper.—Ay, faith and troth, here it is, if it will but hold—I wish things things were done, and the conveyance made.—When was this signed? what hour? Odso, you should have consulted me for the time. Well, but we'll make haste.

Sir S. Haste! ay, ay, haste enough; my son Ben will be in town to-night—I have ordered my lawyer to draw up writings of settlement and jointure—all shall be done to-night.—No matter for the time; pr'ythee, brother Foresight, leave superstition.—Pox o'th' time; there's no time but the time present; there's no more to be said of what's past; and all that is to come will happen. If the sun shine by day, and the stars by night—why, we shall know one another's faces without the help of a candle; and that's all the stars are good for.

For. How, how, Sir Sampson? that all? Give me leave to contradict you, and tell you, you are ignorant.

Sir S. I tell you, I am wise: and sapiens dominabitur astris; there's Latin for you to prove it, and an argument to confound your Ephemeris.—Ignorant!—I tell you I have travelled, old Fercu, and know the globe. I have seen the antipodes, where the sun rises at midnight, and sets at noon-day.

For. But I tell you, I have travelled, and travelled in the celestial spheres; know the signs and the planets, and their houses; can judge of motions direct and retrograde, of sextiles, quadrates, trines and oppositions, fiery trigons, and aquatical trigons; know whether life shall be long or short, happy or unhappy; whether diseases are curable or incurable; if journies shall be prosperous, undertakings successful, or goods stolen recovered: I know—

Sir S. I know the length of the emperor of China's foot; have kissed the Great Mogul's slipper, and rid a hunting upon an elephant with the cham of Tartary.—Body o'me, I have made a cuckold of a king; and the present majesty of Bantam is the issue of these loins.

For. I know when travellers lie or speak truth, when they don't know it themselves.

Sir S. I have known an astrologer made a cuckold in the twinkling of a star; and seen a conjuror, that could not keep the devil out of his wife's circle.

For. What, does he twit me with my wife too? I must be better informed of this. [aside.].—Do you mean my wife, Sir Sampson? Though you made a cuckold of the king of Bantam, yet by the body of the sun—

Sir S. By the horns of the moon, you would say, brother Capricorn.

For. Capricorn in your teeth, thou modern Mandeville; Ferdinand Mendez Pinto was but a type of thee, thou liar of the first magnitude. Take back your paper of inheritance; send your son to sea again. I'll wed my daughter to an Egyptian mummy, ere she shall incorporate with a contemner of sciences, and a defamer of virtue.

Sir S. Body o'me, I have gone too far—I must not provoke honest Albumazar.—An Egyptian mummy is an illustrious creature, my trusty hieroglyphick; and may have significations of futurity about him. Odsbud, I would my son were an Egyptian mummy for thy sake. What, thou art not angry for a jest, my good Haly?—I reverence the sun, moon, and stars, with all my heart.—What! I'll make thee a present of a mummy. Now I think on't, body o'me, I have a shoulder of an Egyptian king, that I purloined from one of the pyramids, powdered with hieroglyphicks; thou shalt have it brought home to thy house; and make an entertainment for all the Philomaths, and students in physick and astrology, in and about London.

For. But what do you know of my wife, Sir Sampson?

Sir S. Thy wife is a constellation of virtues; she is the moon, and thou art the man in the moon; nay, she is more illustrious than the moon; for she has her chastity, without her inconstancy: 'sbud, I was but in jest.

Enter Jeremy.

Sir S. How now? who sent for you, ha? what would you have?

For. Nay, if you were but in jest!—Who's that fellow? I don't like his physiognomy.

Sir S. [to Jeremy.] My son, sir? what son, sir? my son Benjamin, ha?

Jer. No, sir; Mr. Valentine, my master;—it is the first time time he has been abroad since his confinement, and he comes to pay his duty to you.

Sir S. Well, Sir.

Enter Valentine.

Jer. He is here, Sir.

Val. Your blessing, Sir!

Sir S. You've had it already, sir; I think I sent it you to-day in a bill of four thousand pounds.—A great deal of money, brother Foresight!

For. Ay, indeed, Sir Sampson, a great deal of money for a young man; I wonder what he can do with it!

Sir S. Body o'me, so do I.—Hark ye, Valentine, if there be too much, refund the superfluity; dost hear, boy?

Val. Superfluity, sir! it will scarce pay my debts.—I hope you will have more indulgence, than to oblige me to those hard conditions which my necessity signed to.

Sir S. Sir! how? I beseech you, what were you pleased to intimate, concerning indulgence?

Val. Why, sir, that you would not go to the extremity of the conditions, but release me at least from some part.

Sir S. O, sir, I understand you—that's all, ha?

Val. Yes, sir, all that I presume to ask.—But what you, out of fatherly fondness, will be pleased to add, will be doubly welcome.

Sir S. No doubt of it, sweet sir; but your filial piety and my fatherly fondness would fit like two tallies.—Here's a rogue, brother Foresight, makes a bargain under hand and seal in the morning, and would be released from it in the afternoon; here's a rogue, dog; here's a conscience and honesty! This is your wit now, this is the morality of your wit! You are a wit, and have been a beau, and may be a—Why, sirrah, is it not here under hand and seal?—Can you deny it?

Val. Sir, I don't deny it.

Sir S. Sirrah, you'll be hanged; I shall live to see you go up Holborn-hill.—Has he not a rogue's face?—Speak, brother; you understand physiognomy; a hanging look to me—of all my boys he most unlike me.

He has a damn'd Tyburn face, without the benefit of the clergy.

For. Hum!—truly, I don't care to discourage a young man—he has a violent death in his face; but I hope no danger of hanging.

Val. Sir, is this usage for your son?—For that old weather-headed fool, I know how to laugh at him; but you, sir——

Sir S. You, sir; and you, sir.—Why, who are you, sir?

Val. Your son, sir.

Sir S. That's more than I know, sir: and I believe not.

Val. Faith, I hope not.

Sir S. What, would you have your mother a whore? Did you ever hear the like? did you ever hear the like? body o'me—

Val. I would have an excuse for your barbarity and unnatural usage.

Sir S. Excuse?—Impudence! Why, firrah, mayn't I do what I please? are not you my slave? did not I beget you? and might not I have chosen whether I would have begot you or no? Oons, who are you? whence came you? what brought you into the world? how came you here, sir? here, to stand here, upon those two legs, and look erect with that audacious face, hah? Answer me that. Did you come a volunteer into the world? or did I, with the lawful authority of a parent, press you to the service?

Val. I know no more why I came, than you do why you called me. But here I am; and if you don't mean to provide for me, I desire you would leave me as you found me.

Sir S. With all my heart. Come, uncase, strip, and go naked out of the world as you came into it.

Val. My clothes are soon put off—but you must also divest me of my reason, thought, passions, inclinations, affections, appetites, senses, and the huge train of attendants that you begot along with me.

Sir S. Body o'me, what a many-headed monster have I propagated!

Val.

Val. I am of myself, a plain, easy, simple creature; and to be kept at small expence: but the retinue that you gave me are craving and invincible; they are so many devils that you have raised, and will have employment.

Sir S. Oons, what had I to do to get children?—can't a private man be born without all these followers?—Why nothing under an emperor should be born with appetites—why, at this rate, a fellow that has but a groat in his pocket may have a stomach capable of a ten shilling ordinary.

Fer. Nay, that's as clear as the sun; I'll make oath of it before any justice in Middlesex.

Sir S. Here's a cormorant too!—Sheart, this fellow was not born with you?—I did not beget him, did I?

Fer. By the provision that's made for me, you might have begot me too.—Nay, and to tell your worship another truth, I believe you did; for I find I was born with those same whoreson appetites too that my-master speaks of.

Sir S. Why look you there now!—I'll maintain it, that by the rule of right reason this fellow ought to have been born without a palate.—Sheart, what should he do with a distinguishing taste?—I warrant now, he'd rather eat a pheasant, than a piece of poor John—and smell, now; why I warrant he can smell, and loves perfumes above a stink—why there's it; and music—don't you love music, scoundrel?

Fer. Yes, I have a reasonable good ear, fir, as to jigs and country dances, and the like; I don't much matter your solo's or sonata's; they give me the spleen.

Sir S. The spleen? ha, ha, ha! a pox confound you!—Solo's or sonata's? Oons, whose son are you? how were you engendered, muckworm?

Fer. I am, by my father, the son of a chairman; my mother sold oysters in winter, and cucumbers in summer; and I came up stairs into the world; for I was born in a cellar.

For. By your looks, you shall go up stairs out of the world too, friend.

Sir S. And if this rogue were anatomized now, and dissected, he has his vessels of digestion and concoction, and so forth, large enough for the inside of a cardinal; this son of a cucumber!—These things are unaccountable and unreasonable.—Body o'me, why was not I a bear, that my cubs might have lived upon sucking their paws? Nature has been provident only to bears and spiders: the one has its nutriment in its own hands; and the other spins its habitation out of its own entrails.

Val. Fortune was provident enough to supply all the necessities of my nature, if I had my right inheritance.

Sir S. Again! Oons, han't you four thousand pounds?—If I had it again, I would not give thee a groat.—What; wouldst thou have me turn pelican, and feed thee out of my own vitals—Odsheart, live by your wits—you were always fond of the wits.—Now let's see if you have wit enough to keep yourself.—Your brother will be in town to-night, or to-morrow morning; and then look you perform covenants; and so your friend and servant.—Come, brother Foresight.

[Exeunt Sir Sampson and Foresight.]

Jer. I told you what your visit would come to.

Val. 'Tis as much as I expected—I did not come to see him: I came to Angelica; but since she was gone abroad, it was easily turned another way, and at least looked well on my side. What's here? Mrs. Foresight and Mrs. Frail! They are earnest—I'll avoid them.—Come this way, and go and inquire when Angelica will return.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Mrs. Foresight and Mrs. Frail.

Mrs. F. What have you to do to watch me? 'Slife, I'll do what I please.

Mrs. For. You will?

Mrs. F. Yes, marry, will I.—A great piece of business to go to Covent-garden, to take a turn in a hackney-coach with one's friend!

Mrs. For. Nay, two or three turns, I'll take my oath.

Mrs. F. Well, what if I took twenty!—I warrant, if you had been there, it had been only innocent recreation!—Lord, where's the comfort of this life, if we can't have the happiness of conversing where we like?

Mrs. For. But can't you converse at home?—I own it, I think there's no happiness like conversing with an agreeable agreeable man ; I don't quarrel at that, nor I don't think but your conversation was very innocent. But the place is public ; and to be seen with a man in a hackney-coach is scandalous. What if any body else should have seen your alight, as I did ?—How can any body be happy, while they are in perpetual fear of being seen and censured ?—Besides, it would not only reflect upon you, sister, but me !

Mrs. F. Pooh, here's a clutter !—Why should it reflect upon you ?—I don't doubt but you have thought yourself happy in a hackney-coach before now !—If I had gone to Knightsbridge, or to Chelsea, or to Spring-garden, or Barn-elms, with a man alone —something might have been said.

Mrs. For. Why, was I ever in any of those places ?—What do you mean, sister ?

Mrs. F. Was I ? what do you mean ?

Mrs. For. You have been at a worse place.

Mrs. F. I at a worse place, and with a man ?

Mrs. For. I suppose you would not go alone to the World's-end.

Mrs. F. The World's-end ! What, do you mean to banter me ?

Mrs. For. Poor innocent ! you don't know that there is a place called the World's-end ? I'll swear, you can keep your countenance purely ; you'd make an admirable player !

Mrs. F. I'll swear you have a great deal of confidence, and in my mind too much for the stage.

Mrs. For. Very well, that will appear who has most. You never were at the World's-end ?

Mrs. F. No.

Mrs. For. You deny it positively to my face ?

Mrs. F. Your face ! what's your face ?

Mrs. For. No matter for that ; it's as good a face as yours.

Mrs. F. Not by a dozen years wearing. But I do deny it positively to your face then.

Mrs. For. I'll allow you now to find fault with my face ; for I'll swear your impudence has put me out of countenance.

countenance.—But look you here now,—where did you lose this gold bodkin? Oh, sister, sister!

Mrs. F. My bodkin!

Mrs. F. Nay, 'tis yours; look at it.

Mrs. F. Well, if you go to that, where did you find this bodkin?—Oh, sister, sister!—sister every way!

Mrs. For. O, devil on't! that I could not discover her, without betraying myself! [aside.]

Mrs. F. I have heard gentlemen say, sister, that one should take great care, when one makes a thrust in fencing, not to lay open one's self.

Mrs. For. It is very true, sister. Well, since all's out, and, as you say, since we are both wounded, let us do what is often done in duels, take care of one another, and grow better friends than before.

Mrs. F. With all my heart. Ours are but slight flesh wounds; and if we keep them from air, not at all dangerous. Well, give me your hand, in token of sisterly secrecy and affection.

Mrs. For. Here it is, with all my heart.

Mrs. F. Well, as an earnest of friendship and confidence, I'll acquaint you with a design that I have.—To tell truth, and speak openly one to another, I'm afraid the world have observed us more than we have observed one another. You have a rich husband, and are provided for: I am at a loss, and have no great stock either of fortune or reputation, and therefore must look sharply about me. Sir Sampson has a son, that is expected to-night; and by the account I have heard of his education, can be no conjuror. The estate, you know, is to be made over to him.—Now, if I could wheedle him, sister; ha? you understand me?

Mrs. For. I do; and will help you, to the utmost of my power.—And I can tell you one thing that falls out luckily enough; my awkward daughter-in-law, who, you know, is designed to be his wife, is grown fond of Mr. Tattle; now, if we can improve that, and make her have an aversion for the booby, it may go a great way towards his liking you. Here they come together; and let us contrive some way or other to leave them together.

Enter

Enter Tattle and Miss Prue.

Miss P. Mother, mother, mother, look you here.

Miss For. Fie, fie, miss, how you bawl!—Besides, I have told you, you must not call me mother.

Miss P. What must I call you then? are you not my father's wife?

Mrs. For. Madam; you must say madam.—By my soul, I shall fancy myself old indeed, to have this great girl call me mother.—Well, but, miss, what are you so overjoyed at?

Miss P. Look you here, madam, then, what Mr. Tattle has given me.—Look you here, cousin; here's a snuff-box; nay, there's snuff in't—here, will you have any?—Oh good! how sweet it is!—Mr. Tattle is all over sweet; his peruke is sweet, and his gloves are sweet—and his handkerchief is sweet, pure sweet, sweeter than roses,—smell him, mother—madam, I mean.—He gave me this ring, for a kiss.

Tatt. O fie, miss; you must not kiss, and tell.

Miss P. Yes; I may tell my mother—and he says he'll give me something to make me smell so.—Oh, pray lend me your handkerchief.—Smell, cousin; he says, he'll give me something that will make my smocks smell this way.—Is not it pure?—It's better than lavender, mun.—I'm resolved I won't let nurse put any more lavender among my smocks—ha, cousin?

Mrs. F. Fie, miss; amongst your linen you must say—you must never say smock.

Miss P. Why, it is not bawdy, is it, cousin?

Tatt. Oh, madam! you are too severe upon miss: you must not find fault with her pretty simplicity; it becomes her strangely.—Pretty miss, don't let them persuade you out of your innocence!

Mrs. For. Oh, demn you, toad!—I wish you don't persuade her out of her innocence.

Tatt. Whio I, madam!—O Lord, how can your ladyship have such a thought?—sure you don't know me!

Mrs. F. Ah, devil, fly devil—He's as close, sister, as a confessor.—He thinks we don't observe him.

Mrs. For. A cunning cur! how soon he could find out a fresh harmless creature—and left us, sister, presently.

Tatt. Upon reputation——

Mrs. F. They're all so, sister, these men—they love to have the spoiling of a young creature; they are as fond of it, as of being first in the fashion, or of seeing a new play the first day.—I warrant it would break Mr. Tattle's heart, to think that any body else should be before-hand with him!

Tatt. Oh Lord, I swear I would not for the world—

Mrs. F. O, hang you; who'll believe you?—You'll be hang'd before you'd confess—we know you—she's very pretty!—Lord, what pure red and white!—she looks so wholesome;—ne'er stir, I don't know, but I fancy if I were a man—

Miss P. How you love to jeer one, cousin.

Mrs. For. Hark'ee, sister—by my soul, the girl is spoiled already—d'ye think she'll ever endure a great lubberly tarpawlin?—Gad, I warrant you she won't let him come near her, after Mr. Tattle.

Mrs. F. On my soul, I'm afraid not—eh! filthy creature, that smells all of pitch and tar!—Devil take you, you confounded toad—why did you see her before she was married?

Mrs. For. Nay, why did we let him?—My husband will hang us—he'll think we brought them acquainted.

Mrs. F. Come, faith, let us be gone—If my brother Foresight should find us with them, he'd think so, sure enough.

Mrs. For. So he would—but then the leaving them together is as bad—and he's such a sly devil, he'll never miss an opportunity.

Mrs. F. I don't care; I won't be seen in it.

Mrs. For. Well, if you should, Mr. Tattle, you'll have a world to answer for: remember, I wash my hands of it; I'm thoroughly innocent.

[Exeunt Mrs. Frail and Mrs. Foresight.]

Miss P. What makes them go away, Mr. Tattle?—What do they mean, do you know?

Tatt. Yes, my dear—I think I can guess—but hang me if I know the reason of it.

Miss P. Come, must not we go too?

Tatt. No, no; they don't mean that.

Miss

Miss P. No! what then? What shall you and I do together?

Tatt. I must make love to you, pretty miss; will you let me make love to you?

Miss P. Yes, if you please.

Tatt. Frank, egad, at least. What a pox does Mrs. Foresight mean by this civility? Is it to make a fool of me? or does she leave us together out of good morality, and do as she would be done by?—Egad, I'll understand it so. [aside.]

Miss P. Well; and how will you make love to me?—Come, I long to have you begin.—Must I make love too? You must tell me how.

Tatt. You must let me speak, miss; you must not speak first. I must ask you questions, and you must answer.

Miss P. What, is it like the catechism?—Come then, ask me.

Tatt. D'ye think you can love me?

Miss P. Yes.

Tatt. Pooh, pox, you must not say yes already. I shan't care a farthing for you then, in a twinkling.

Miss P. What must I say then?

Tatt. Why you must say no; or, believe not; or, you can't tell.

Miss P. Why, must I tell a lie then?

Tatt. Yes, if you'd be well-bred. All well-bred persons lie—Besides, you are a woman; you must never speak what you think: your words must contradict your thoughts; but your actions may contradict your words. So, when I ask you, if you can love me, you must say no; but you must love me too.—If I tell you you are handsome, you must deny it, and say, I flatter you.—But you must think yourself more charming than I speak you—and like me for the beauty which I say you have, as much as if I had it myself.—If I ask you to kiss me, you must be angry; but you must not refuse me. If I ask you for more, you must be more angry—but more complying; and as soon as ever I make you say you'll cry out, you must be sure to hold your tongue.

Miss P. O Lord, I swear this is pure!—I like it better than our old-fashioned country way of speaking one's mind.—And must not you lie too?

Tatt. Hum!—Yes—but you must believe I speak truth.

Miss P. O Gemini! Well, I always had a great mind to tell lies—but they frightened me, and said it was a sin.

Tatt. Well, my pretty creature, will you make me happy by giving me a kiss?

Miss P. No, indeed; I'm angry at you!

[Runs and kisses him.]

Tatt. Hold, hold, that's pretty well—but you should not have given it me, but have suffered me to have taken it.

Miss P. Well, we'll do it again.

Tatt. With all my heart.—Now, then, my little angel!

[kisses her.]

Miss P. Pish!

Tatt. That's right.—Again, my charmer!

[kisses again.]

Miss P. O fie! nay, now I can't abide you.

Tatt. Admirable! That was as well as if you had been born and bred in Covent-garden.—And won't you shew me, pretty miss, where your bed-chamber is?

Miss P. No, indeed won't I: but I'll run there, and hide myself from you behind the curtains.

Tatt. I'll follow you.

Miss P. Ah, but I will hold the door with both hands, and be angry; and you shall push me down before you come in.

Tatt. No, I'll come in first, and push you down afterwards.

Miss P. Will you? then I'll be more angry, and more complying.

Tatt. Then I'll make you cry out.

Miss P. O but you shan't, for I'll hold my tongue.

Tatt. Oh, my dear apt scholar!

Miss P. Well, now I'll run, and make more haste than you.

Tatt. You shall not fly so fast as I'll pursue. [Exeunt.]

End of the Second Act.

ACT

A C T III.

Nurse alone.

MISS, miss, miss Prue!—Mercy on me, marry, and amen!—Why, what's become of the child?—Why, miss, miss Foresight!—Sure she has lockt herself up in her chamber, and gone to sleep, or to prayers!—Miss, miss!—I hear her.—Come to your father, child.—Open the door.—Open the door, miss.—I hear you cry husht.—O Lord, whose there? [peeps.]—What's here to do?—O the Father! a man with her!—Why, miss, I say; God's my life, here's fine doings towards!—O Lord, we're all undone!—O you young harlotry!—[knocks.]—Ods my life! won't you open the door? I'll come in the back way. [Exit.]

Enter Tattle and Miss Prue.

Miss P. O Lord, she's coming—and she'll tell my father. What shall I do now?

Tatt. Pox take her! if she had staid two minutes longer, I should have wished for her coming.

Miss P. O dear, what shall I say? tell me, Mr. Tattle, tell me a lie.

Tatt. There's no occasion for a lie; I could never tell a lie to no purpose—But, since we have done nothing, we must say nothing, I think. I hear her—I'll leave you together, and come off as you can.

Ang. You can't accuse me of inconstancy; I never told you that I loved you.

Val. But I can accuse you of uncertainty, for not telling me whether you did or not.

Ang. You mistake indifference for uncertainty; I never had concern enough to ask myself the question.

Scan. Nor good-nature enough to answer him that did ask you: I'll say that for you, madam.

Ang. What, are you setting up for good-nature?

Scand. Only for the affectation of it, as the women do for ill-nature.

Ang. Persuade your friend that it is all affectation.

Scand.

Scand. I shall receive no benefit from the opinion: for I know no effectual difference between continued affectation and reality.

Tatt. [coming up] Scandal, are you in private discourse? Any thing of secrecy? [aside to Scandal.

Scand. Yes, but I dare trust you. We were talking of Angelica's love to Valentine; you won't speak of it.

Tatt. No, no, not a syllable—I know that's a secret, for it is whispered every where.

Scand. Ha, ha, ha!

Ang. What is, Mr. Tattle? I heard you say something was whispered every where.

Scand. Your love for Valentine.

Ang. How!

Tatt. No, madam; his love for your ladyship—Gad take me, I beg your pardon—for I never heard a word of your ladyship's passion till this instant.

Ang. My passion!—And who told you of my passion, pray, sir?

Scand. Why, is the devil in you? did not I tell it you for a secret?

Tatt. Gadso, but I thought she might have been trusted with her own affairs.

Scand. Is that your discretion? trust a woman with herself?

Tatt. You say true; I beg your pardon—I'll bring all off.—It was impossible, madam, for me to imagine that a person of your ladyship's wit and gallantry could have so long received the passionate addresses of the accomplished Valentine, and yet remain insensible: therefore you will pardon me, if, from a just weight of his merit, with your ladyship's good judgment, I formed the balance of a reciprocal affection.

Val. O the devil! what damn'd coftive poet has given thee this lesson of fustian to get by rote?

Ang. I dare swear you wrong him; it is his own—and Mr. Tattle only judges of the success of others, from the effects of his own merit; for, certainly, Mr. Tattle was never denied any thing in his life.

Tatt. O Lord! yes indeed, madam, several times.

Ang.

Ang. I swear I don't think it is possible.

Tatt. Yes, I vow and swear, I have. Lord, madam, I'm the most unfortunate man in the world, and the most cruelly used by the ladies.

Ang. Nay, now you're ungrateful.

Tatt. No, I hope not.—It is as much ingratitude to own some favours, as to conceal others.

Val. There, now it is out.

Ang. I don't understand you now. I thought you had never asked any thing but what a lady might modestly grant, and you confess.

Scand. So, faith, your business is done here; now you may go brag somewhere else.

Tatt. Brag! O heavens! Why, did I name any body?

Ang. No; I suppose that is not in your power; but you would if you could, no doubt on't.

Tatt. Not in my power, madam?—What! does your ladyship mean, that I have no woman's reputation in my power?

Scand. Oons, why you won't own it, will you?

[aside.]

Tatt. Faith, madam, you are in the right; no more I have, as I hope to be saved; I never had it in my power to say any thing to a lady's prejudice in my life.—For, as I was telling you, madam, I have been the most unsuccessful creature living in things of that nature; and never had the good fortune to be trusted once with a lady's secret; not once.

Ang. No?

Val. Not once, I dare answer for him.

Scand. And I'll answer for him; for, I'm sure if he had, he would have told me. I find, madam, you don't know Mr. Tattle.

Tatt. No indeed, madam, you don't know me at all, I find; for sure, my intimate friends would have known—

Ang. Then it seems you would have told, if you had been trusted.

Tatt. O pox, Scandal, that was too far put!—Never have told particulars, madam. Perhaps I might have talked as of a third person—or have introduced an amour

amour of my own, in conversation, by way of novel: but never have explained particulars.

Ang. But whence comes the reputation of Mr. Tattle's secrecy, if he was never trusted?

Scand. Why thence it arises.—The thing is proverbially spoken; but may be applied to him.—As if we should say in general terms, He only is secret, who never was trusted; a satirical proverb upon our sex.—There is another upon yours—as, She is chaste, who was never asked the question. That's all.

Val. A couple of very civil proverbs, truly. It is hard to tell whether the lady or Mr. Tattle be the more obliged to you. For you found her virtue upon the backwardness of the men; and his secrecy upon the mistrust of the women.

Tatt. Gad, it's very true, madam; I think we are obliged to acquit ourselves.—And for my part—but your ladyship is to speak first.

Ang. Am I? Well, I freely confess, I have resisted a great deal of temptation.

Tatt. And, egad, I have given some temptation that has not been resisted.

Val. Good.

Ang. I cite Valentine here, to declare to the court, how fruitless he has found his endeavours, and to confess all his solicitations and my denials.

Val. I am ready to plead, Not Guilty, for you; and Guilty, for myself.

Scand. So, why this is fair! here's demonstration, with a witness.

Tatt. Well, my witnesses are not present.—Yet, I confess, I have had favours from persons; but, as the favours are numberless, so the persons are nameless.

Scand. Pooh, this proves nothing.

Tatt. No? I can shew letters, lockets, pictures, and rings; and, if there be occasion for witnesses, I can summon the maids at the chocolate-houses, all the porters at Pall-Mall and Covent-Garden, the door-keepers at the play-house, the drawers at Locket's, Pontack, the Rummer, Spring-garden, my own landlady and valet de chambre; all who shall make oath, that I receive more letters

letters than the secretary's office; and that I have more vizor masks to inquire for me, than ever went to see the hermaphrodite, or the naked prince. And it is notorious, that, in a country church, once, an inquiry being made who I was, it was answered, "I was the famous Tattle, who had ruined so many women."

Val. It was there, I suppose, you got the nick-name of the Great Turk.

Tatt. True; I was called Turk Tattle all over the parish.—The next Sunday, all the old women kept their daughters at home, and the parson had not half his congregation. He would have brought me into the spiritual court: but I was revenged upon him, for he had a handsome daughter, whom I initiated into the science. But I repented it afterwards; for it was talked of in town.—And a lady of quality, that shall be nameless, in a raging fit of jealousy, came down in her coach and six horses, and exposed herself upon my account. Gad, I was sorry for it with all my heart.—You know whom I mean.—you know where we raffled—

Scand. Mum, Tattle!

Val. 'Sdeath, are not you ashamed?

Ang. O barbarous! I never heard so insolent a piece of vanity!—Fie, Mr. Tattle!—I'll swear I could not have believed it.—Is this your secrecy!

Tatt. Gad so, the heat of my story carried me beyond my discretion, as the heat of the lady's passion hurried her beyond her reputation.—But I hope you don't know whom I mean; for there were a great many ladies raffled.—Pox on't, now could I bite off my tongue.

Scand. No, don't; for then you'll tell us no more. Come, I'll recommend a song to you, upon the hint of my two proverbs; and I see one in the next room that will sing it. [goes to the door.]

Tatt. For Heaven's sake, if you do guess, say nothing. Gad, I'm very unfortunate!

Scand. Pray sing the first song in the last new play.

SONG.

S O N G.

I.

*A nymph and a swain to Apollo once pray'd,
The swain had been jilted, the nymph been betray'd:
Their intent was, to try if his oracle knew
E'er a nymph that was chaste, or a swain that was true.*

II.

*Apollo was mute, and had like t'have been pos'd,
But sagely at length he this secret disclos'd:
He alone won't betray, in whom none will confide;
And the nymph may be chaste, that has never been tried.*

Enter Sir Sampson, Mrs. Frail, Miss Prue, and Servant.

Sir S. Is Ben come? Odso, my son Ben come? Odd, I'm glad on't.—Where is he? I long to see him. Now, Mrs. Frail, you shall see my son Ben.—Body o'me, he's the hopes of my family—I han't seen him these three years—I warrant he's grown!—Call him in; bid him make haste [Exit Servant.—I'm ready to cry for joy.

Mrs. F. Now, Miss, you shall see your husband.

Miss P. Pish, he shall be none of my husband.

Mrs. F. Hush! Well, he shan't; leave that to me—
—I'll beckon Mr. Tattle to us.

Ang. Won't you stay and see your brother?

Val. We are the twin stars, and cannot shine in one sphere; when he rises, I must set.—Besides, if I should stay, I don't know but my father in good-nature may press me to the immediate signing the deed of conveyance of my estate; and I'll defer it as long as I can.—Well, you'll come to a resolution.

Ang. I cannot. Resolution must come to me, or I shall never have one.

Scand. Come, Valentine, I'll go with you; I have something in my head, to communicate to you.

[Exeunt Scandal and Valentine.

Sir

Sir S. What! is my son Valentine gone? What! is he sneaked off, and would not see his brother? There's an unnatural whelp! there's an ill-natured dog! What! were you here too, madam, and could not keep him? could neither love, nor duty, nor natural affection, oblige him? Odsbud, madam, have no more to say to him; he is not worth your consideration. The rogue has not a drachm of generous love about him—all interest, all interest! He's an undone scoundrel, and courts your estate. Body o'me, he does not care a doit for your person.

Ang. I am pretty even with him, Sir Sampson; for, if ever I could have liked any thing in him, it should have been his estate too. But, since that's gone, the bait's off, and the naked hook appears.

Sir S. Odsbud, well spoken; and you are a wiser woman than I thought you were: for most young women now-a-days are to be tempted with a naked hook.

Ang. If I marry, Sir Sampson, I am for a good estate with any man, and for any man with a good estate: therefore, if I were obliged to make a choice, I declare I'd rather have you than your son.

Sir S. Faith and troth, you are a wife woman; and I'm glad to hear you say so. I was afraid you were in love with the reprobate. Odd, I was sorry for you with all my heart. Hang him, mongrel; cast him off. You shall see the rogue shew himself, and make love to some desponding Cadua of fourscore for sustenance. Odd, I love to see a young spendthrift forced to cling to an old woman for support, like ivy round a dead oak—faith I do. I love to see them hug and cotton together, like down upon a thistle.

Enter Ben and Servant.

Ben. Where's father?

Serv. There, l.; his back's towards you. [Exit.

Sir S. My son Ben! Bless thee, my dear boy! Body o'me, thou art heartily welcome.

Ben. Thank you, father; and I'm glad to see you.

Sir S. Odsbud, and I'm glad to see thee. Kiss me, boy; kiss me again and again, dear Ben. [Kiss him.

Ben. So, so, enough, father.—Moss, I'd rather kiss these gentlewomen.

Sir

Sir S. And so thou shalt.—Mrs. Angelica, my son Ben.

Ben. Forsooth, if you please! [salutes her.]—Nay, mistress, I'm not for dropping anchor here; about ship, i'faith. [kisses Fraik.]—Nay, and you too, my little cock-boat! so. [kisses Miss.]

Fatt. Sir, you're welcome ashore.

Ben. Thank you, thank you, friend.

Sir S. Thou hast been many a weary league, Ben, since I saw thee.

Ben. Ey, ey, been? been far enough, and that be all. Well, father, and how do all at home? how does brother Dick, and brother Val?

Sir S. Dick! body o'me, Dick has been dead these two years. I writ you word, when you were at Leghorn.

Ben. Mefs, that's true: marry, I had forgot. Dick is dead, as you say.—Well, and how? I have a many questions to ask you; well, you ben't married again, father, be you?

Sir S. No, I intend you shall marry, Ben; I would not marry, for thy sake.

Ben. Nay, what does that signify?—An you marry again—why then, I'll go to sea again, so there's one for t'other, an that be all.—Pray don't let me be your hindrance; e'en marry, a God's name, an the wind sit that way. As for my part, mayhap I have no mind to marry.

Mrs. F. That would be pity, such a handsome young gentleman!

Ben. Handsome! he, he, he! Nay, forsooth, an you be for joking, I'll joke with you; for I love my jest, an the ship were sinking, as we said at sea. But I'll tell you why I don't much stand towards matrimony. I love to roam about from port to port, and from land to land: I could never abide to be port-bound, as we call it. Now a man that is married has, as it were, d'ye see, his feet in the bilboes, and mayhap mayn't get them out again when he would.

Sir S. Ben is a wag.

Ben.

Ben. A man that is married, d'ye see, is no more like another man, than a galley-slave is like one of us free sailors: he is chained to an oar all his life; and mayhap forced to tug a leaky vessel into the bargain.

Sir S. A very wag! Ben is a very wag; only a little rough; he wants a little polishing.

Mrs. F. Not at all; I like his humour mightily: it is plain and honest; I should like such a humour in a husband extremely.

Ben. Say'n you so, forsooth? Marry, and I should like such a handsome gentlewoman for a bed-fellow hugely. How say you, mistress? would you like going to sea? Mefs, you're a tight vessel, and well rigged, an you were but as well manned.

Mrs. F. I should not doubt that, if you were master of me.

Ben. But I'll tell you one thing, an you come to sea in a high wind, or that lady—you mayn't carry so much sail o'your head—Top and top gallant, by the mefs!

Mrs. F. No? why so?

Ben. Why, an you do, you may run the risk to be overfet: and then you'll carry your keels above water—he, he, he!

Ang. I swear, Mr. Benjamin is the veriest wag in nature; an absolute sea wit.

Sir S. Nay, Ben has parts; but, as I told you before, they want a little polishing. You must not take any thing ill, madam.

Ben. No, I hope the gentlewoman is not angry; I mean all in good part: for, if I give a jest, I'll take a jest; and so, forsooth, you may be as free with me.

Ang. I thank you, sir; I am not at all offended.—But methinks, Sir Sampson, you should leave him alone with his mistress. Mr. Tattle, we must not hinder lovers.

Tatt. Well, Miss, I have your promise.

Sir S. Body o'me, madam, you say true.—Look you, Ben, this is your mistress.—Come, miss, you must not be shame-faced; we'll leave you together.

Miss

174 LOVE FOR LOVE.

Miss P. I can't abide to be left alone. Mayn't my cousin stay with me?

Sir S. No, no. Come, let's away.

Ben. Look you, father, mayhap the young woman mayn't take a liking to me.

Sir S. I warrant thee, boy. Come, come, we'll be gone. I'll venture that.

[Exeunt Sir Sampson, Tattle, and Mrs. Frail.]

Ben. Come, mistress, will you please to sit down? For, an you stand a stern a that'n, we shall never grapple together.—Come, I'll hawl a chair; there, an you please to sit, I'll sit by you.

Miss P. You need not sit so near one; if you have any thing to say, I can hear you farther off; I an't deaf.

Ben. Why that's true, as you say, nor I an't dumb; I can be heard as far as another.—I'll heave off, to please you. [sits farther off.]—An we were a league afunder, I'd undertake to hold discourse with you, an 'twere not a main high wind indeed, and full in my teeth. Look you, forsooth; I am, as it were, bound for the land of matrimony: 'tis a voyage, d'ye see, that was none of my seeking; I was commanded by father, and if you like of it, mayhap I may steer into your harbour. How say you, mistress? The short of the thing is, that, if you like me, and I like you, we may chance to swing in a hammock together.

Miss P. I don't know what to say to you, nor I don't care to speak with you at all.

Ben. No? I'm sorry for that.—But pray why are you so scornful?

Miss P. As long as one must not speak one's mind, one had better not speak at all, I think; and truly I won't tell a lie for the matter.

Ben. Nay, you say true in that; it's but a folly to lie; for to speak one thing, and to think just the contrary way, is, as it were, to look one way, and to row another. Now, for my part, d'ye see, I'm for carrying things above board; I'm not for keeping any thing under hatches—so that, if you ben't as willing as I, say so, a God's name; there's no harm done. Mayhap you may

LOVE FOR LOVE.

But pray Miss why are you so scornful?

may be shame-faced; some maidens, tho' they love a man well enough, yet they don't care to tell'n so to's face. If that's the case, why silence gives consent.

Miss P. But I'm sure it is not so, for I'll speak sooner than you should believe that; and I'll speak truth, though one should always tell a lie to a man; and I don't care, let my father do what he will, I'm too big to be whipt; so I'll tell you plainly, I don't like you, nor love you at all; nor never will, that's more. So, there's your answer for you; and don't trouble me no more, you ugly thing.

Ben. Look you, young woman, you may learn to give good words, however. I spoke you fair, d'ye see, and civil.—As for your love, or your liking, I don't value it of a rope's end—and mayhap I like you as little as you do me.—What I said was in obedience to father. Gad, I fear a whipping no more than you do. But I tell you one thing—if you should give such language at sea, you'd have a cat o'nine tails laid cross your shoulders. Flesh! who are you? You heard t'other handsome young woman speak civilly to me, of her own accord. Whatever you think of yourself, Gad, I don't think you are any more to compare to her, than a can of small-beer to a bowl of punch.

Miss P. Well, and there's a handsome gentleman, and a fine gentleman, and a sweet gentleman, that was here, that loves me, and I love him; and if he sees you speak to me any more, he'll thrash your jacket for you; he will, you great sea-calf.

Ben. What! do you mean that fair-weather spark that was here just now? Will he thrash my jacket?—Let'n—let'n.—But, an he comes near me, mayhap I may giv'n a salt eel for's supper, for all that. What does father mean, to leave me alone, as soon as I come home, with such a dirty dowdy?—Sea-calf? I an't calf enough to lick your chalked face, you cheese-curd, you.—Marry thee! Oons I'll marry a Lapland witch as soon, and live upon selling contrary winds, and wrecked vessels.

Miss P. I won't be call'd names, nor I won't be abused thus, so I won't.—If I were a man—[cries]— you

you durst not talk at this rate—no, you durst not, you stinking tar-barrel.

Enter Mrs. Foresight and Mrs. Frail.

Mrs. For. They have quarrelled, just as we could wish.

Ben. Tar-barrel? Let your sweetheart there call me so, if he'll take your part, your Tom Essence, and I'll say something to him—Gad, I'll lace his musk-doublet for him. I'll make him stink; he shall smell more like a weasel than a civet cat, afore I ha' done with 'en.

Mrs. For. Bless me! what's the matter, Miss? What, does she cry?—Mr. Benjamin, what have you done to her?

Ben. Let her cry: the more she cries, the less she'll—she has been gathering foul weather in her mouth, and now it rains out at her eyes.

Mrs. For. Come, Miss, come along with me; and tell me, poor child.

Mrs. F. Lord, what shall we do? There's my brother Foresight and Sir Sampson coming. Sister, do you take Miss down into the parlour, and I'll carry Mr. Benjamin into my chamber; for they must not know that they are fallen out.—Come, sir, will you venture yourself with me? [locking kindly on him.]

Ben. Venture? Meffs, and that I will, though it were to sea in a storm. [Exeunt.]

Enter Sir Sampson and Foresight.

Sir S. I left them together here. What, are they gone? Ben is a brisk boy: he has got her into a corner—father's own son, faith! he'll touzle her, and mouzle her. The rogue's sharp set coming from sea. If he should not stay for saying grace, old Foresight, but fall to without the help of a parson, ha? Odd, if he should, I could not be angry with him; 'twould be but like me, a chip of the old block. Ha! thou'rt melancholic, old prognostication; as melancholic as if thou hadst spilt the salt, or paired thy nails on a Sunday.—Come, cheer up, look about thee: look up, old star-gazer.—Now is he poring upon the ground for a crooked pin, or an old horse-nail, with the head towards him.

For.

For. Sir Sampson, we'll have the wedding to-morrow morning.

Sir S. With all my heart.

For. At ten o'clock; punctually at ten.

Sir S. To a minute, to a second; thou shalt set thy watch; and the bridegroom shall observe its motions; they shall be married to a minute, go to bed to a minute; and when the alarm strikes, they shall keep time like the figures of St. Dunstan's clock, and consummatum est shall ring all over the parish!

Enter Scandal.

Scand. Sir Sampson, sad news.

For. Bless us!

Sir S. Why, what's the matter?

Scand. Can't you guess at what ought to afflict you and him, and all of us, more than any thing else?

Sir S. Body o' me, I don't know any universal grievance, but a new tax, or the loss of the Canary fleet—unless Popery should be landed in the west, or the French fleet were at anchor at Blackwall.

Scand. No? Undoubtedly, Mr. Foresight knew all this, and might have prevented it.

For. 'Tis no earthquake?

Scand. No, not yet; nor whirlwind. But we don't know what it may come to—but it has had a consequence already that touches us all.

Sir S. Why, body o' me, out with it.

Scand. Something has appeared to your son Valentine—he's gone to bed upon't, and very ill.—He speaks little, yet he says he has a world to say. Asks for his father and the wife Foresight; talks of Raymond Lully, and the ghost of Lilly. He has secrets to impart, I suppose, to you two. I can get nothing out of him but sighs. He desires he may see you in the morning; but would not be disturbed to-night, because he has some business to do in a dream.

Sir. S. Hoity toity! what have I to do with his dreams or his divination?—Body o'me, this is a trick, to defer signing the conveyance. I warrant the devil will tell him in a dream, that he must not part with his estate. But I'll bring him a parson to tell him that the devil's a liar—or, if that won't do, I'll bring a lawyer, that shall out-lie the devil; and so I'll try whether my blackguard or his shall get the better of the day. [Exit.

Scand. Alas! Mr. Foresight, I am afraid all is not right.—You are a wise man, and a conscientious man; a searcher into obscurity and futurity; and, if you commit an error, it is with a great deal of consideration, and discretion, and caution.

For. Ah, good Mr. Scandal.

Scand. Nay, nay, 'tis manifest; I do not flatter you.—But Sir Sampson is hasty, very hasty—I'm afraid he is not scrupulous enough, Mr. Foresight.—He has been wicked; and Heaven grant he may mean well in his affair with you!—But my mind gives me, these things cannot be wholly insignificant. You are wise, and should not be over-reached: methinks you should not.

For. Alas, Mr. Scandal—Humanum est errare!

Scand. You say true, man will err; mere man will err—but you are something more.—There have been wise men; but they were such as you—men who consulted the stars and were observers of omens.—Solomon was wise; but how? by his judgment in astrology.—So says Pineda, in his third book and eighth chapter.

For. You are learned, Mr. Scandal.

Scand. A trifle—but a lover of art.—And the wise men of the east owed their instruction to a star; which is rightly observed by Gregory the Great, in favour of astrology! And Albertus Magnus makes it the most valuable science—because, says he, it teaches us to consider the causation of causes, in the causes of things.

For. I protest, I honour you, Mr. Scandal.—I did not think you had been read in these matters.—Few young men are inclined—

Scand.

Scand. I thank my stars that have inclined me.— But I fear this marriage and making over the estate, this transferring of a rightful inheritance, will bring judgments upon us. I prophesy it; and I would not have the fate of Cassandra, not to be believed. Valentine is disturbed; what can be the cause of that? and Sir Sampson is hurried on by an unusual violence—I fear he does not act wholly from himself; and methinks he does not look as he used to do.

For. He was always of an impetuous nature. — But as to this marriage, I have consulted the stars; and all appearances are prosperous.

Scand. Come, come, Mr. Foresight; let not the prospect of worldly lucre carry you beyond your judgment, nor against your conscience. — You are not satisfied that you act justly.

For. How!

Scand. You are not satisfied, I say. — I am loth to discourage you—but it is palpable that you are not satisfied.

For. How does it appear, Mr. Scandal? I think I am very well satisfied.

Scand. Either you suffer yourself to deceive yourself, or you do not know yourself.

For. Pray explain yourself.

Scand. Do you sleep well o' nights?

For. Very well.

Scand. Are you certain? you do not look so.

For. I am in health, I think.

Scand. So was Valentine this morning; and looked just so.

For. How! Am I altered any way? I don't perceive it.

Scand. That may be; but your beard is longer than it was two hours ago.

For. Indeed? bless me!

Enter Mrs. Foresight.

Mrs. For. Husband, will you go to bed? it's ten o'clock. Mr. Scandal, your servant.

Scand.

Scand. Pox on her, she has interrupted my design—but I must work her into the project.—You keep early hours, madam.

Mrs. For. Mr. Foresight is punctual; we sit up after him.

For. My dear, pray lend me your glass, your little looking-glass.

Scand. Pray lend it him, madam — I'll tell you the reason — [She gives him the glass: Scandal and she whisper] — My passion for you is grown so violent—that I am no longer master of myself—I was interrupted in the morning, when you had charity enough to give me your attention; and I had hopes of finding another opportunity of explaining myself to you—but was disappointed all this day; and the uneasiness that has attended me ever since, brings me now hither at this unseasonable hour.

Mrs. For. Was there ever such impudence, to make love to me before my husband's face? I'll swear, I'll tell him.

Scand. Do. I'll die a martyr rather than disclaim my passion. But come a little farther this way; and I'll tell you what project I had to get him out of the way, that I might have an opportunity of waiting upon you. [Whisper. Foresight looking in the glass.]

For. I do not see any revolution here. — Methinks I look with a serene and benign aspect, — pale, a little pale—but the roses of these cheeks have been gathered many years—Ha! I do not like that sudden flushing — gone already! — Hem, hem, hem! faintish. My heart is pretty good; yet it beats: and my pulses, ha! — I have none—mercy on me!—hum!—Yes, here they are. — Gallop, gallop, gallop, gallop, gallop, gallop! hey, whither will they hurry me? — Now they're gone again—and now I'm faint again; and pale again, and, hem! and my, hem! — breath, and, hem! — grows short; hem! he, he, hem!

Scand. It takes: pursue it, in the name of love and pleasure.

Mrs. For. How do you do, Mr. Foresight?

For.

LOVE FOR LOVE. 221

For. Hum, not so well as I thought I was. Lend me your hand.

Scand. Look you there now. — Your lady says your sleep has been unquiet of late.

For. Very likely!

Mrs. For. O, mighty restless! but I was afraid to tell him so.—He has been subject to talking and starting.

Scand. And did not use to be so?

Mrs. For. Never, never; till within these three nights, I cannot say that he has once broken my rest since we have been married.

For. I will go to bed.

Scand. Do so, Mr. Foresight, and say your prayers. — He looks better than he did.

Mrs. For. Nurse, nurse!

For. Do you think so, Scandal?

Scand. Yes, yes; I hope this will be gone by morning: take it in time.

For. I hope so.

Enter Nurse.

Mrs. For. Nurse, your master is not well; put him to bed.

Scand. I hope you will be able to see Valentine in the morning. — You had best take a little diacodium and cowslip water, and lie upon your back; may be you may dream.

For. I thank you, Mr. Scandal; I will. — Nurse, let me have a watch-light, and lay The Crumbs of Comfort by me.

Nurse. Yes, sir.

For. And—hem, hem! I am very faint.

Scand. No, no, you look much better.

For. Do I? And, d'ye hear—bring me, let me see—within a quarter of twelve—hem—he, hem!—just upon the turning of the tide, bring me the urinal. — And I hope, neither the lord of my ascendant, nor the moon will be combust; and then I may do well.

Scand. I hope so—Leave that to me; I will erect a scheme; and I hope I shall find both Sol and Venus in the sixth house.

L 3.

For.

For. I thank you, Mr. Scandal; indeed that would be a great comfort to me. Hem, hem! good night.

[Exit.]

Scand. Good night, good Mr. Foresight. And I hope Mars and Venus will be in conjunction—while your wife and I are together.

Mrs. For. Well; and what use do you hope to make of this project? You don't think that you are ever like to succeed in your design upon me?

Scand. Yes, faith, I do; I have a better opinion both of you and myself, than to despair.

Mrs. For. Did you ever hear such a toad?—Hark'ye, devil: do you think any woman honest?

Scand. Yes, several, very honest—they'll cheat a little at cards, sometimes; but that's nothing.

Mrs. For. Pshaw! but virtuous, I mean?

Scand. Yes, faith, I believe some women are virtuous too; but 'tis as I believe some men are valiant, through fear—For why should a man court danger, or a woman shun pleasure?

Mrs. For. O monstrous! What are conscience and honour?

Scand. Why, honour is a public enemy; and conscience a domestic thief: and he that would secure his pleasure, must pay a tribute to one, and go halves with t'other. As for honour, that you have secured; for you have purchased a perpetual opportunity for pleasure.

Mrs. For. An opportunity for pleasure?

Scand. Ay, your husband; an husband is an opportunity for pleasure. So you have taken care of honour, and 'tis the least I can do to take care of conscience.

Mrs. For. And so you think we are free for one another?

Scand. Yes, faith, I think so; I love to speak my mind.

Mrs. For. Why then I'll speak my mind. Now, as to this affair between you and me. Here you make love to me; why, I'll confess it does not displease me. Your person is well enough, and your understanding is not amiss.

Scand

Scand. I have no great opinion of myself; but I think I am neither deformed, nor a fool.

Mrs. For. But you have a villainous character; you are a libertine in speech, as well as practice.

Scand. Come, I know what you would say — you think it more dangerous to be seen in conversation with me, than to allow some other men the last favour. You mistake; the liberty I take in talking is purely affected, for the service of your sex. He that first cries out stop thief, is often he that stole the treasure. I am a juggler, that acts by confederacy; and if you please, we'll put a trick upon the world.

Mrs. For. Ay; but you are such an universal juggler — that I'm afraid you have a great many confederates.

Scand. Faith, I'm sound.

Mrs. For. O fie! — I'll swear you're impudent.

Scand. I'll swear you're handsome.

Mrs. For. Pish, you'd tell me so, though you did not think so.

Scand. And you'd think so, though I did not tell you so: and now I think we know one another pretty well.

Mrs. For. O Lord! who's here?

Enter Mrs. Frail and Ben.

Ben. Mefs, I love to speak my mind — Father has nothing to do with me. — Nay, I can't say that neither; he has something to do with me; but what does that signify? If so be, that I ben't minded to be steered by him; 'tis as thof he should strive against wind and tide.

Mrs. F. Ay, but, my dear, we must keep it secret, till the estate be settled; for, you know, marrying without an estate, is like sailing in a ship without ballast.

Ben. He, he, he! why that's true; just so for all the world, it is as like as two cable ropes.

Mrs. F. And though I have a good portion; you know one would not venture all in one bottom.

Ben. Why that's true again; for mayhap one bottom may spring a leak. You have hit it indeed; mefs, you've nick'd the channel.

Mrs. F. Well, but if you should forsake me after all, you'd break my heart.

Ben. Break your heart? I'd rather the Marygold should should break her cable in a storm, as well as I love her. Flesh, you don't think I'm false-hearted, like a landman. A sailor would be honest, tho' mayhap he has never a penny of money in his pocket.—Mayhap I may not have so fair a face as a citizen or courtier; but, for all that, I've as good blood in my veins, and a heart as sound as a biscuit.

Mrs. F. And will you love me always?

Ben. Nay, an I love once, I'll stick like pitch; I'll tell you that. Come, I'll sing you a song of a sailor.

Mrs. F. Hold, there's my sister; I'll call her to hear it.

Mrs. For. Well! I won't go to bed to my husband to-night; because I'll retire to my own chamber, and think of what you have said.

Scand. Well; you'll give me leave to wait upon you to your chamber door; and leave you my last instructions?

Mrs. For. Hold, here's my sister coming towards us.

Mrs. F. If it won't interrupt you, Mr. Ben will entertain you with a song.

Ben. The song was made upon one of our ship's-crew's wife; our boatswain made the song; mayhap you know her, sir. Before she married she was called Buxom Joan of Deptford.

Scand. I have heard of her.

B A L L A D.

I.

*A Soldier and a sailor,
A tinker and a tailor,
Had once a doubtful strife, sir,
To make a maid a wife, sir,
Whose name was Buxom Joan.
For now the time was ended,
When she no more intended,
To lick her lips at men, sir,
And gnaw the sheets in vain, sir,
And lie o' nights alone.*

II.

*The soldier swore like thunder,
He lov'd her more than plunder;*

And

And shew'd her many a scar, sir,
That he had brought from far, sir,
With fighting for her sake.
The tailor thought to please her,
With offering her his measure.
The tinker too with mettle
Said he could mend her kettle,
And stop up every leak.

III.

But while these three were prating,
The sailor slyly waiting,
Thought if it came about, sir,
That they should all fall out, sir,
He then might play his part:
And just e'en as he meant, sir,
To loggerheads they went, sir,
And then he let fly at her,
A shot 'twixt wind and water,
That won the fair maid's heart.

Ben. If some of our crew that came to see me are not gone, you shall see that we sailors can dance sometimes, as well as other folks.—[Whistles.] I warrant that brings them, an they be within hearing.

Enter Seamen.

Oh, here they be!—and fiddles along with them. Come, my lads, let's have a round, and I'll make one. [Dance.] We're merry folks, we sailors; we han't much to care for. Thus we live at sea; eat biscuit, and drink flip; put on a clean shirt once a quarter—come home, and lie with our landladies once a year, get rid of a little money; and then put off with the next fair wind. Howd'yelikeus?

Mrs. F. Oh, you are the happiest, merriest men alive!

Mrs. For. We're beholden to Mr. Benjamin for this entertainment.—I believe it is late.

Ben. Why, forsooth, an you think so, you had best go to bed. For my part, I mean to tofs a can, and remember my sweetheart, afore I turn in; mayhap I may dream of her!

Mrs. For. Mr. Scandal, you had best go to bed; and dream too.

Scand. Why, faith, I have a good lively imagination; and can dream as much to the purpose as another, if I set about it. But dreaming is the poor retreat of a lazy, hopeless, and imperfect lover; 'tis the last glimpse of love to worn-out sinners, and the faint dawning of a bliss to wishing girls and growing boys.

*There's nought but willing waking love that can Make blest'd the ripen'd maid and finish'd man. [Exeunt.
End of the Third Act.*

A C T IV.

Valentine's Lodgings.

Enter Scandal and Jeremy.

Scand. WELL, is your master ready? does he look madly, and talk madly?

Jer. Yes, sir; you need make no great doubt of that: he that was so near turning poet yesterday morning, can't be much to seek in playing the madman to-day.

Scand. Would he have Angelica acquainted with the design?

Jer. No, sir, not yet.—He has a mind to try whether his playing the madman won't make her play the fool, and fall in love with him; or at least own that she has loved him all this while, and concealed it.

Scand. I saw her take coach just now with her maid; and think I heard her bid the coachman drive hither.

Jer. Like enough, sir; for I told her maid this morning, my master was run stark mad, only for love of her mistress. I hear a coach stop: if it should be she, sir, I believe he would not see her, till he hears how she takes it.

Scand. Well, I'll try her—'tis she; here she comes.

Enter Angelica.

Ang. Mr. Scandal, I suppose you don't think it a novelty, to see a woman visit a man at his own lodgings in a morning?

Scand. Not upon a kind occasion, madam. But, when a lady comes tyrannically, to insult a ruined lover, and make manifest the cruel triumphs of her beauty, the barbarity of it something surprises me.

Ang. I don't like raillery from a serious face.—Pray tell me what is the matter?

Jer. No strange matter, madam; my master's mad, that's that's all. I suppose your ladyship has thought him so a great while.

Ang. How d'ye mean, mad?

Jer. Why, faith, madam, he's mad for want of his wits, just as he was poor for want of money. His head is e'en as light as his pockets; and any body that has a mind to a bad bargain, can't do better than to beg him for his estate.

Ang. If you speak truth, your endeavouring at wit is very unseasonable. —

Scand. She's concern'd, and loves him! [Aside.]

Ang. Mr. Scandal, you can't think me guilty of so much inhumanity, as not to be concerned for a man I must own myself obliged to.—Pray tell me the truth.

Scand. Faith, madam, I wish telling a lie would mend the matter. But this is no new effect of an unsuccessful passion.

Ang. [Aside.] I know not what to think! Yet I should be vex'd to have a trick put upon me!—May I not see him?

Scand. I'm afraid the physician is not willing you should see him yet.—Jeremy, go in and inquire, [Exit Jeremy.]

Ang. Ha! I saw him wink and smile! I fancy a trick.—I'll try. [Aside.]—I would disguise to all the world, sir, a failing which I must own to you—I fear my happiness depends upon the recovery of Valentine. Therefore I conjure you, as you are his friend, and as you have compassion on one fearful of affliction, to tell me what I am to hope for—I cannot speak—But you may tell me, for you know what I would ask.

Scand. So, this is pretty plain!—Be not too much concerned, madam; I hope his condition is not desperate. An acknowledgment of love from you, perhaps, may work a cure, as the fear of your aversion occasioned his distemper.

Ang. Say you so? nay, then I'm convinced: and if I don't play trick for trick, may I never taste the pleasure of revenge! [Aside.]—Acknowledgment of love! I find you have mistaken my compassion, and think me guilty of a weakness I am a stranger to. But I have too much sincerity to deceive you, and too much charity to suffer him to be deluded with vain hopes. Good nature and humanity oblige me to be concerned for him; but to love, is neither in my power nor inclination; and if he can't be cured without I suck the poison from his wounds, I'm afraid he won't recover his senses till I lose mine.

Scand. Hey, brave woman, i'faith!—Won't you see him then, if he desires it?

Ang. What signify a madman's desires? besides, 'twould make me uneasy—If I don't see him, perhaps my concern for him may lessen—If I forget him, 'tis no more than he has done by himself; and now the surprise is over, methinks I am not half so sorry as I was.

Scand. So, faith, good-nature works apace; you were confessing just now an obligation to his love.

Ang. But I have considered that passions are unreasonable and involuntary. If he loves, he can't help it; and if I don't love I cannot help it; no more than he can help his being a man, or I my being a woman; or no more than I can help my want of inclination to stay longer here. [Exit.]

Scand. Humph!—An admirable composition, faith, this same womankind!

Enter Jeremy.

Jer. What, is she gone, sir?

Scand. Gone? why she was never here, nor any where else; nor I don't know her if I see her, nor you neither.

Jer. Good luck! what's the matter now? are any more of us to be mad? Why, sir, my master longs to see her; and is almost mad in good earnest with the joyful news of her being here.

Scand. We are all under a mistake.—Ask no questions, for I can't resolve you; but I'll inform your master. In the mean time, if our project succeed no better with his father than it does with his mistress, he may descend from his exaltation of madness into the road of common sense, and be content only to be made a fool with other reasonable people. I hear Sir Sampson. You know your cue? I'll to your master. [Exit.]

Enter Sir Sampson and Buckram.

Sir S. D'ye see, Mr. Buckram, here's the paper signed with his own hand.

Buck.

Buck. Good, fir. And the conveyance is ready drawn in this box, if he be ready to sign and seal.

Sir S. Ready! body o'me, he must be ready: his sham sickness shan't excuse him.—O, here's his scoundrel.—Sirrah, where's your master?

Fer. Ah, fir, he's quite gone!

Sir S. Gone! what, he's not dead?

Fer. No, fir, not dead.

Sir S. What, is he gone out of town? run away? ha! has he trick'd me? Speak, varlet.

Fer. No, no, fir, he's safe enough, fir, an he were but as sound, poor gentleman! He is indeed here, fir, and not here, fir.

Sir S. Hey-day, rascal, do you banter me? firrah, d'ye banter me?—Speak, firrah; where is he? for I will find him.

Fer. Would you could, fir; for he has lost himself.—Indeed, fir, I have almost broke my heart about him—I can't refrain tears when I think on him, fir: I'm as melancholy for him as a passing-bell, fir; or a horse in a pound.

Sir S. A pox confound your similitudes, fir:—Speak to be understood; and tell me in plain terms what the matter is with him, or I'll crack your fool's scull.

Fer. Ah, you've hit it, fir; that's the matter with him, fir; his scull's crack'd, poor gentleman! he's stark mad, fir.

Sir S. Mad!

Buck. What, is he non compos?

Fer. Quite non compos, fir.

Buck. Why then, all's obliterated, Sir Sampson. If he be non compos mentis, his act and deed will be of no effect; it is not good in law.

Sir S. Oons, I won't believe it; let me see him, fir.—Mad! I'll make him find his senses.

Fer. Mr. Scandal is with him, fir; I'll knock at the door. [Goes to the scene, which opens and discovers Valentine and Scandal. Valentine upon a couch disorderly dressed.]

Sir S. How now? what's here to do?

Val. Ha! who's that?

[Starting.]

Scand. For Heaven's sake, softly, fir, and gently; don't provoke him.

Val.

Val. Answer me, who's that? and that?

Sir S. Gads bobs, does he not know? is he mischievous? I'll speak gently. — Val, Val, dost thou not know me, boy? not know thy own father, Val? I am thy own father; and this, honest Brief Buckram, the lawyer.

Val. It may be so—I did not know you—the world is full.—There are people that we do know, and people that we do not know; and yet the sun shines upon all alike.—There are fathers that have many children; and there are children that have many fathers—'tis strange! But I am Honesty, and come to give the world the lie.

Sir S. Body o'me, I know not what to say to him.

Val. Why does that lawyer wear black?—does he carry his conscience without-side? Lawyer, what art thou? dost thou know me?

Buck. O Lord, what must I say?—Yes, fir.

Val. Thou liest; for I am Honesty. 'Tis hard I cannot get a livelihood amongst you. I have been sworn out of Westminster Hall the first day of every term—Let me see—no matter how long—But I'll tell you one thing; it is a question that would puzzle an arithmetician, if I should ask him, whether the Bible saves more souls in Westminster Abbey, or damns more in Westminster Hall?—For my part I am Honesty, and can't tell; I have very few acquaintance.

Sir S. Body o'me, he talks sensibly in his madness—Has he no intervals?

Jer. Very short, fir.

Buck. Sir, I can do you no service while he's in this condition. Here's your paper, fir.—He may do me a mischief if I stay.—The conveyance is ready, fir, if he recover his senses. [Exit.

Sir S. Hold, hold, don't you go yet.

Scand. You'd better let him go, fir; and send for him if there be occasion: for I fancy his presence provokes him more.

Val. Is the lawyer gone? 'Tis well; then we may drink about without going together by the ears.—Heigh ho! what o'clock is it? My father here! your blessing, fir.

Sir S. He recovers!—Bless thee, Val!—How dost thou do, boy?

Val.

Val. Thank you, fir, pretty well.—I have been a little out of order. Won't you please to sit, fir?

Sir S. Ay, boy.—Come, thou shalt sit down by me.

Val. Sir, 'tis my duty to wait.

Sir S. No, no: come, come, sit thee down, honest

Val. How dost thou do? let me feel thy pulse—Oh, pretty well now, Val. Body o'me, I was sorry to see thee indisposed: but I am glad thou art better, honest Val.

Val. I thank you, fir.

Scand. Miracle! The monster grows loving. [Aside.

Sir S. Let me feel thy hand again, Val. It does not shake—I believe thou canst write, Val. Ha, boy? thou canst write thy name, Val.?—Jeremy, step and overtake Mr. Buckram; bid him make haste back with the conveyance,—quick! [Exit Jeremy.

Scand. That ever I should suspect such a heathen of any remorse. [Aside.

Sir S. Dost thou know this paper, Val.? I know thou'rt honest, and will perform articles.

[Shews him the paper, but holds it out of his reach.

Val. Pray let me see it, fir; you hold it so far off, that I can't tell whether I know it or no.

Sir S. See it, boy? Ay, ay, why thou dost see it—'tis thy own hand, Vally. Why, let me see, I can read it as plain as can be: look you here [Reads.] The condition of this obligation—Look you, as plain as can be, so it begins—And then at the bottom—As witness my hand, VALENTINE LEGEND, in great letters. Why, 'tis as plain as the nose on one's face. What, are my eyes better than thine? I believe I can read it farther off yet—let me see. [Stretches his arm as far as he can.

Val. Will you please to let me hold it, fir?

Sir S. Let thee hold it, say'st thou?—Ay, with all my heart.—What matter is it who holds it? What need any body hold it?—I'll put it in my pocket, Val., and then nobody need hold it. [Puts the paper in his pocket.] There, Val.: it's safe enough, boy.—But thou shalt have it as soon as thou hast set thy hand to another paper, little Val.

Enter Jeremy and Buckram.

Val. What, is my bad genius here again? Oh no, 'tis the lawyer with an itching palm; and he's come to be scratched.—

scratched.—My nails are not long enough.—Let me have a pair of red-hot tongs quickly, quickly; and you shall see me act St. Dunstan, and lead the devil by the nose.

Buck. O Lord, let me be gone! I'll not venture myself with a madman. [Runs out.]

Val. Ha, ha, ha! you need not run so fast. Honesty will not overtake you.—Ha, ha, ha! the rogue found me out to be in forma pauperis presently.

Sir S. Oons! what a vexation is here! I know not what to do or say, or which way to go.

Val. Who's that, that's out of his way? I am Honesty, and can set him right.—Harkee, friend, the strait road is the worst way you can go.—He that follows his nose always, will very often be led into a stink. Probatum est.—But what are you for? religion or politics? There's a couple of topics for you, no more like one another than oil and vinegar; and yet these two beaten together by a state cook, make sauce for the whole nation.

Sir S. What the devil had I to do, ever to beget sons? why did I ever marry?

Val. Because thou wert a monster, old boy. The two greatest monsters in the world, are a man and a woman. What's thy opinion?

Sir S. Why my opinion is, that these two monsters joined together make yet a greater; that's a man and his wife.

Val. Aha, old Truepenny! say'st thou so? Thou hast nicked it.—But it is wonderful strange, Jeremy.

Jer. What is, sir?

Val. That grey hairs should cover a green head—and I make a fool of my father. What's here? Erra Pater, or a bearded Sibyl? If Prophecy comes, Honesty must give place. [Exeunt Valentine and Jeremy.]

Enter Foresight, Mrs. Foresight, and Mrs. Frail.

For. What says he? What did he prophesy? Ha, Sir Sampson! Bless us! how are we?

Sir S. Are we? A pox o' your prognostications! Why, we are fools as we used to be.—Oons, that you could not foresee that the moon would predominate, and my son be mad!—Where's your oppositions, your trines, and your quadrates?—What did your Cardan and your Ptolemy tell you? Your Messahalalah and your Longomontanus, nus, your harmony of chiromancy with astrology! Ah! pox on't, that I who know the world, and men and manners, who don't believe a syllable in the sky and stars, and sun and almanacks, and trash, should be directed by a dreamer, an omen-hunter, and defer business in expectation of a lucky hour! when, body o'me! there never was a lucky hour after the first opportunity. [Exit.

For. Ah, Sir Sampson, Heaven help your head! — This is none of your lucky hour — Nemo omnibus horis sapit! — What, is he gone, and in contempt of science? Ill stars and unconvertible ignorance attend him!

Scand. You must excuse his passion, Mr. Foresight; for he has been heartily vexed. — His son is Non compos mentis, and thereby incapable of making any conveyance in law; so that all his measures are disappointed.

For. Ha! say you so?

Mrs. F. What, has my sea lover lost his anchor of hope then? [aside to Mrs. Foresight.

Mrs. For. O sister, what will you do with him?

Mrs. F. Do with him? Send him to sea again in the next foul weather. — He's used to an inconstant element, and won't be surpris'd to see the tide turned.

For. Wherein was I mistaken, not to foresee this?

[Considers.

Scand. Madam, you and I can tell him something else that he did not foresee, and more particularly relating to his own fortune! [aside to Mrs. Foresight.

Mrs. For. What do you mean? I don't understand you.

Scand. Hush, softly — the pleasures of last night, my dear; too considerable to be forgot so soon.

Mrs. For. Last night? and what would your impudence infer from last night? Last night was like the night before, I think.

Scand. 'Sdeath, do you make no difference between me and your husband?

Mrs. For. Not much — he's superstitious; and you are mad, in my opinion.

Scand. You make me mad. — You are not serious? — pray recollect yourself.

Mrs. For. O yes, now I remember, you were very impertinent and impudent — and would have come to bed to me.

Scand.

Scand. And did not?

Mrs. For. Did not! With what face can you ask the question?

Scand. This I have heard of before, but never believed. I have been told, she had that admirable quality of forgetting to a man's face in the morning, that she had lain with him all night; and denying that she had done favours, with more impudence than she could grant them. [aside.] Madam, I'm your humble servant, and honour you.—You look pretty well, Mr. Foresight. How did you rest last night?

For. Truly, Mr. Scandal, I was so taken up with broken dreams and distracted visions, that I remember little.

Scand. 'Twas a very forgetting night.—But would you not talk with Valentine? Perhaps you may understand him; I am apt to believe, there is something mysterious in his discourse, and sometimes rather think him inspired than mad.

For. You speak with singular good judgment, Mr. Scandal, truly.—I am inclining to your Turkish opinion in this matter, and do reverence a man whom the vulgar think mad. Let us go to him.

Mrs. F. Sister, do you go with them; I'll find out my lover, and give him his discharge, and come to you.—
[Exeunt Scandal, Mr. and Mrs. Foresight] On my conscience, here he comes!

Enter Ben.

Ben. All mad, I think.—Flesh, I believe all the Calentures of the sea are come ashore, for my part.

Mrs. F. Mr. Benjamin in choler!

Ben. No, I'm pleased well enough, now I have found you.—Mefs, I have had such a hurricane on your account yonder!

Mrs. F. My account?—Pray, what's the matter?

Ben. Why, father came, and found me squabbling with yon chitty-faced thing, as he would have me marry—so he asked what was the matter.—He asked in a furlly sort of a way.—It seems brother Val is gone mad, and so that put'n into a passion; but what did I know that? what's that to me?—So he asked in a furlly sort of manner—and, God, I answered 'en as furlily. What thof he be my father, father, I an't bound prentice to 'en: so, faith I told'n in plain terms, if I were minded to marry, I'd marry to please myself, not him; and for the young woman that he provided for me, I thought it more fitting for her to learn her sampler, and make dirt-pies than to look after a husband; for my part, I was none of her man—I had another voyage to make, let him take it as he will.

Mrs. F. So then, you intend to go to sea again?

Ben. Nay, nay, my mind run upon you—but I would not tell him so much.—So he said, he'd make my heart ache; and if so be that he could get a woman to his mind, he'd marry himself. Gad, says I, an you play the fool and marry at these years, there's more danger of your head's aching than my heart!—He was woundy angry when I giv'n that wipe—he had'nt a word to say; and so I left'n, and the green girl together; mayhap the bee may bite, and he'll marry her himself—with all my heart!

Mrs. F. And were you this undutiful and graceless wretch to your father?

Ben. Then why was he graceless first?—If I am undutiful and graceless, why did he beget me so? I did not beget myself.

Mrs. F. O impiety! how have I been mistaken! What an inhuman merciless creature have I set my heart upon! O, I am happy to have discovered the shelves and quicksands that lurk beneath that faithless smiling face!

Ben. Hey-tofs! what's the matter now? why you ben't angry, be you?

Mr. F. O see me no more—for thou wert born among rocks, suckled by whales, cradled in a tempest, and whistled to by winds; and thou art come forth with fins and scales, and three rows of teeth, a most outrageous fish of prey.

Ben. O Lord, O Lord, she's mad, poor young woman! Love has turned her senses; her brain is quite overset.—Well-a-day! how shall I do to set her to rights?

Mrs. F. No, no, I am not mad, monster; I am wise enough to find you out.—Hadst thou the impudence to aspire at being a husband, with that stubborn and disobedient temper?—You, that know not how to submit to a father, presume to have a sufficient stock of duty to undergo.

undergo a wife? I should have been finely fobbed indeed, very finely fobbed!

Ben. Harkee, forsooth; if so be that you are in your right senses, d'ye see, for aught as I perceive I'm like to be finely fobbed—if I have got anger here upon your account, and you are tacked about already!—What d'ye mean, after all your fair speeches, and stroaking my cheeks, and kissing and hugging, what would you sheer off so? would you, and leave me aground?

Mrs. F. No, I'll leave you adrift, and go which way you will.

Ben. What, are you false-hearted then?

Mrs. F. Only the wind's changed.

Ben. More shame for you!—The wind's changed? It is an ill wind blows nobody good.—Mayhap I have a good riddance on you, if these be your tricks.—What did you mean all this while to make a fool of me?

Mrs. F. Any fool, but a husband.

Ben. Husband! Gad, I would not be your husband, if you would have me, now I know your mind; thof you had your weight in gold and jewels, and thof I loved you never so well.

Mrs. F. Why canst thou love, Porpus?

Ben. No matter what I can do; don't call names.—I don't love you so well as to bear that, whatever I did.—I'm glad you shew yourself, mistress:—let them marry you as don't know you.—Gad, I know you too well, by sad experience; I believe he that marries you will go to sea in a hen-pecked frigate—I believe that, young woman! and mayhap may come to an anchor at Cuckold's Point; so there's a dash for you, take it as you will; mayhap you may hollow after me when I won't come to. [Exit.]

Mrs. F. Ha, ha, ha! no doubt on't [Sings.] My true love is gone to sea! [Enter Mrs. Foresight.] O sister, had you come a minute sooner, you would have seen the resolution of a lover.—Honest Tar and I are parted;—and with the same indifference that we met.—On my life, I am half vexed at the insensibility of a brute I despised.

Mrs. For. What then, he bore it most herpically?

Mrs. F. Most tyrannically—for you see he has got the the start of me; and I the poor forsaken maid am left complaining on the shore. But I'll tell you a hint that he has given me. Sir Sampson is enraged, and talks desperately of committing matrimony himself.—If he has a mind to throw himself away, he can't do it more effectually than upon me, if we could bring it about.

Mrs. For. O hang him, old fox! he's too cunning; besides, he hates both you and me.—But I have a project in my head for you, and I have gone a good way towards it. I have almost made a bargain with Jeremy, Valentine's man, to sell his master to us.

Mrs. F. Sell him? how?

Mrs. For. Valentine raves upon Angelica, and took me for her; and Jeremy says will take any body for her that he imposes on him.—Now I have promised him mountains, if in one of his mad fits he will bring you to him in her stead, and get you married together, and put to bed together—and after consummation, girl, there's no revoking. And if he should recover his senses, he'll be glad at least to make you a good settlement.—Here they come; stand aside a little, and tell me how you like the design.

Enter Valentine, Scandal, Foresight, and Jeremy.

Scand. And have you given your master a hint of their plot upon him? [To Jeremy.]

Jer. Yes, sir; he says he'll favour it, and mistake her for Angelica.

Scand. It may make us sport.

For. Mercy on us!

Val. Hush!—interrupt me not—I'll whisper prediction to thee, and thou shalt prophecy.—I am Honesty, and can teach thy tongue a new trick.—I have told thee what's past—Now I'll tell what's to come!—Dost thou know what will happen to-morrow?—Answer me not—for I will tell thee. To-morrow knaves will thrive through craft and fools through fortune; and Honesty will go as it did, frost-nipt in a summer suit. Ask me questions concerning to-morrow.

Scand. Ask him, Mr. Foresight.

For. Pray what will be done at court?

Val. Scandal will tell you—I am Honesty; I never come there.

For.

For. In the city?

Val. Oh, prayers will be said in empty churches, at the usual hours. Yet you will see such zealous faces behind counters, as if religion were to be sold in every shop. Oh! things will go methodically in the city. The clocks will strike twelve at noon, and the horned herd buz in the Exchange at two. Husbands and wives will drive distinct trades; and care and pleasure separately occupy the family. Coffee-houses will be full of smoke and stratagem. And the cropt prentice that sweeps his master's shop in the morning, may ten to one dirty his sheets before night. But there are two things that you will see very strange; which are, wanton wives with their legs at liberty, and tame cuckolds with chains about their necks.—But hold, I must examine you before I go further; you look suspiciously. Are you a husband?

For. I am married.

Val. Poor creature! Is your wife of Covent-garden parish?

For. No; St. Martin in the Fields.

Val. Alas; poor man! his eyes are sunk, and his hands shrivelled; his legs dwindled, and his back bowed. Pray, pray for a metamorphosis.—Change thy shape, and shake off age; get thee Medea's kettle, and be boiled anew; come forth with labouring, callous hands, a chine of steel and Atlas's shoulders. Let Taliacotius trim the calves of twenty chairmen, and make thee pedestals to stand erect upon; and look matrimony in the face. Ha, ha, ha! that a man should have a stomach to a wedding supper, when the pigeons ought rather to be laid to his feet! ha, ha, ha!

For. His frenzy is very high now, Mr. Scandal.

Scand. I believe it is a spring tide.

For. Very likely truly; you understand these matters.—Mr. Scandal, I shall be very glad to confer with you about these things which he has uttered.—His sayings are very mysterious and hieroglyphical.

Val. Oh, why would Angelica be absent from my eyes so long?

Fer. She's here, sir.

Mrs. For. Now, sister.

Mrs.

Mrs. F. O Lord, what must I say?

Scand. Humour him, madam, by all means.

Val. Where is she? Oh, I see her!—She comes like riches, health, and liberty, at once, to a despairing, starving, and abandoned wretch.—O welcome, welcome!

Mrs. F. How d'ye, sir? can I serve you?

Val. Harkee—I have a secret to tell you—Endymion and the moon shall meet us upon Mount Latmos, and we'll be married in the dead of night.—But say not a word.—Hymen shall put his torch into a dark lantern, that it may be secret; and Juno shall give her peacock poppy water, that he may fold his ogling tail, and Argus's hundred eyes be shut, ha? Nobody shall know but Jeremy.

Mrs. F. No, no, we'll keep it secret; it shall be done presently.

Val. The sooner the better—Jeremy, come hither—closer—that none may overhear us.—Jeremy, I can tell you news. Angelica is turned nun; and I am turned friar: and yet we'll marry one another in spite of the Pope.—Get me a cowl and beads, that I may play my part—for she'll meet me two hours hence in black and white, and a long veil to cover the project; and we won't see one another's faces, till we have done something to be ashamed of—and then we'll blush once for all.

Enter Tattle and Angelica.

Jer. I'll take care, and——

Val. Whisper.

Ang. Nay, Mr. Tattle, if you make love to me, you spoil my design; for I intend to make you my confident.

Scand. How's this! Tattle making love to Angelica!

Tatt. But, madam, to throw away your person, such a person! and such a fortune, on a madman!

Ang. I never loved him till he was mad; but don't tell any body so.

Tatt. Tell, madam? alas, you don't know me.—I have much ado to tell your ladyship how long I have been in love with you—but, encouraged by the impossibility of Valentine's making any more addresses to you, I have ventured to declare the very inmost passion of my heart. Oh, madam, look upon us both. There you see the ruins of a poor decayed creature!—Here, a complete lively figure, with youth and health, and all his five senses in perfection, madam; and to all this, the most passionate lover—

Ang. O, fie for shame, hold your tongue. A passionate lover, and five senses in perfection! When you are as mad as Valentine, I'll believe you love me; and the maddest shall take me.

Val. It is enough. Ha! who's there?

Mrs. F. O Lord, her coming will spoil all. [to Jeremy.]

Jer. No, no, madam; he won't know her; if he should, I can persuade him.

Val. Scandal, who are these? Foreigners? If they are, I'll tell you what I think.—Get away all the company but Angelica, that I may discover my design to her. [Whispers.]

Scand. I will—I have discovered something of Tattle, that is of a piece with Mrs. Frail. He courts Angelica; if we could contrive to couple them together——
Hark'ee—— [Whispers.]

Mrs. For. He won't know you, cousin; he knows nobody.

For. But he knows more than any body.—Oh, niece, he knows things past and to come, and all the profound secrets of time.

Tatt. Look you, Mr. Foresight; it is not my way to make many words of matters, and so I shan't say much. But in short, d'ye see, I will hold you a hundred pounds now, that I know more secrets than he.

For. How? I cannot read that knowledge in your face, Mr. Tattle.—Pray, what do you know?

Tatt. Why, d'ye think I'll tell you, sir?—Read it in my face! No, sir, it is written in my heart; and safer there, sir, than letters written in juice of lemon, for no fire can fetch it out. I am no blab, sir.

Val. Acquaint Jeremy with it; he may easily bring it about.—They are welcome, and I'll tell them so myself. [To Scandal.] What, do you look strange upon me?—Then I must be plain. [Coming up to them.] I am Honesty, and hate an old acquaintance with a new face.

[Scandal goes aside with Jeremy.]

Tatt. Do you know me, Valentine?

Val. You? Who are you? I hope not.

Tatt. I am Jack Tattle, your friend.

Val.

Val. My friend! what to do? I am no married man, and thou canst not lie with my wife. I am very poor, and thou canst not borrow money of me. Then what employment have I for a friend?

Tatt. Ha! a good open speaker, and not to be trusted with a secret.

Ang. Do you know me, Valentine?

Val. Oh, very well.

Ang. Who am I?

Val. You're a woman—one to whom Heaven gave beauty, when it grafted roses on a briar. You are the reflection of heaven in a pond; and he that leaps at you is sunk. You are all white, a sheet of lovely spotless paper, when you were first born; but you are to be scrawled and blotted by every goose's quill. I know you; for I loved a woman, and loved her so long, that I found out a strange thing; I found out what a woman was good for.

Tatt. Ay, pr'ythee, what's that?

Val. Why, to keep a secret.

Tatt. O Lord!

Val. O, exceeding good to keep a secret: for though she should tell, yet she is not believed.

Tatt. Ha! good again, faith.

Val. I would have music.—Sing me the song that I like.—

S O N G.

I.

*I Tell thee, Charmion, could I time retrieve,
And could again begin to love and live,
To you I should my earliest offering give;
I know my eyes would lead my heart to you,
And I should all my vows and oaths renew;
But, to be plain, I never would be true.*

II.

*For, by our weak and weary truth, I find,
Love hates to center in a point assign'd;
But runs with joy the circle of the mind:
Then never let us chain what should be free,
But for relief of either sex agree:
Since women love to change, and so do we.*

No more; for I am melancholy.

[Walks musing.

Jer. [Jeremy and Scandal whisper.] I'll do't, sir.

Scand. Mr. Foresight, we had best leave him. He may grow outrageous, and do mischief.

For. I will be directed by you.

Jer. [to Mrs. Frail.] You'll meet, madam. — I'll take care every thing shall be ready.

Mrs. F. Thou shalt do what thou wilt; in short, I will deny thee nothing.

Tatt. Madam, shall I wait upon you? [To Angelica.

Ang. No, I'll stay with him. — Mr. Scandal will protect me. Aunt, Mr. Tattle desires you would give him leave to wait upon you.

Tatt. Pox on't, there's no coming off, now she has said that — Madam, will you do me the honour?

Mrs. For. Mr. Tattle might have used less ceremony!

[Exeunt Mrs. Frail, Mr. and Mrs. Foresight and Tattle.

Scand. Jeremy, follow Tattle. [Exit Jeremy.

Ang. Mr. Scandal, I only stay till my maid comes, and because I had a mind to be rid of Mr. Tattle.

Scand. Madam, I am very glad that I overheard a better reason which you gave to Mr. Tattle; for his impertinence forced you to acknowledge a kindness for Valentine, which you denied to all his sufferings and my solicitations. So I'll leave him to make use of the discovery; and your ladyship to the free confession of your inclinations.

Ang. Oh Heavens! you won't leave me alone with a madman?

Scand. No, madam; I only leave a madman to his remedy. [Exit.

Val. Madam, you need not be very much afraid, for I fancy I begin to come to myself.

Ang. Ay, but if I don't fit you, I'll be hang'd! [Aside.

Val. You see what disguises love makes us put on, Gods have been in counterfeited shapes for the same reason; and the divine part of me, my mind, has worn this masque of madness, and this motley livery, only as the slave of love, and menial creature of your beauty.

Ang. Mercy on me, how he talks! — Poor Valentine!

Val. Nay, faith, now let us understand one another, hypocrisy apart. — The comedy draws towards an end; and let us think of leaving acting, and be ourselves; and, since since you have loved me, you must own, I have at length deserved you should confess it.

Ang. [sighs.] I would I had loved you!—for, Heaven knows, I pity you; and, could I have foreseen the bad effects, I would have striven; but that's too late!

Val. What sad effects? what's too late?—My seeming madness has deceived my father, and procured me time to think of means to reconcile me to him, and preserve the right of my inheritance to his estate; which otherwise, by articles, I must this morning have resigned.—And this I had informed you of to-day, but you were gone before I knew you had been here.

Ang. How! I thought your love of me had caused this transport in your soul; which, it seems you only counterfeited for mercenary ends and sordid interest.

Val. Nay, now you do me wrong; for, if any interest was considered, it was yours; since I thought I wanted more than love, to make me worthy of you.

Ang. Then you thought me mercenary—But how am I deluded, by this interval of sense, to reason with a madman?

Val. Oh, 'tis barbarous to misunderstand me longer.

Enter Jeremy.

Ang. Oh, here's a reasonable creature—sure he will not have the impudence to persevere!—Come, Jeremy, acknowledge your trick, and confess your master's madness counterfeited.

Jer. Counterfeit, madam! I'll maintain him to be as absolutely and substantially mad, as any freeholder in Bedlam. Nay, he's as mad as any projector, fanatic, cheat, mist, lover, or poet, in Europe.

Val. Sirrah, you lie; I am not mad.

Ang. Ha, ha, ha! you see he denies it.

Jer. O Lord, madam, did you ever know any madman mad enough to own it?

Val. Sp't, can't you apprehend?

Ang. Why, he talked very sensibly just now.

Jer. Yes, madam; he has intervals; but you see begins to look wild again now.

Val. Why you thick-skulled rascal, I tell you the farce is done, and I'll be mad no longer.

M 2

Ang.

Ang. Ha, ha, ha! is he mad or no, Jeremy?

Jer. Partly, I think—for he does not know his own mind two hours.—I'm sure I left him just now in the humour to be mad: and I think I have not found him very quiet at the present. [One knocks.] Who's there?

Val. Go see, you sot. I'm very glad that I can move your mirth, though not your compassion.

Ang. I did not think you had apprehension enough to be exceptions: but madmen shew themselves most by over-pretending to a sound understanding, as drunken men do by over-acting sobriety. I was half inclining to believe you, till I accidentally touched upon your tender part. But now you have restored me to my former opinion and compassion.

Jer. Sir, your father has sent, to know if you are any better yet.—Will you please to be mad, sir, or how?

Val. Stupidity! you know the penalty of all I'm worth must pay for the confession of my senses. I'm mad, and will be mad, to every body but this lady.

Jer. So;—just the very back-side of truth.—But lying is a figure in speech, that interlards the greatest part of my conversation.—Madam, your ladyship's woman.

Enter Jenny.

Ang. Well, have you been there?—Come hither.

Jenny. Yes, madam; Sir Sampson will wait upon you presently.

Val. You are not leaving me in this uncertainty?

Ang. Would any thing but a madman complain of uncertainty? Uncertainty and expectation are the joys of life. Security is an insipid thing; and the overtaking and possessing of a wish, discovers the folly of the chace. Never let us know one another better; for the pleasure of a masquerade is done, when we come to shew our faces. But I'll tell you two things before I leave you; I am not the fool you take me for; and you are mad, and don't know it.

[Exeunt Angelica and Jenny.

Val. From a riddle you can expect nothing but a riddle. There's my instruction, and the moral of my lesson.

Jer. What, is the lady gone again, sir? I hope you understood one another before she went?

Val.

Val. Understood ! she is harder to be understood than a piece of Egyptian antiquity, or an Irish manuscript ; you may pore till you spoil your eyes, and not improve your knowledge.

Jer. I have heard them say, sir, they read hard Hebrew books backwards. May be you begin to read at the wrong end !

Val. They say so of a witch's prayer ; and dreams and Dutch almanacks are to be understood by contraries. But there is regularity and method in that ; she is a medal without a reverse or inscription, for indifference has both sides alike. Yet while she does not seem to hate me, I will pursue her, and know her if it be possible, in spite of the opinion of my satirical friend, who says,

*That women are like tricks by slight of hand ;
Which, to admire, we should not understand.*

[Exeunt.]

A C T V.

A Room in Foresight's House.

Enter Angelica and Jenny.

Ang. WHERE is Sir Sampson ? did you not tell me he would be here before me ?

Jenny. He's at the great glass in the dining-room, madam, setting his cravat and wig.

Ang. How ! I'm glad on't.—If he has a mind I should like him, it's a sign he likes me ; and that's more than half my design.

Jenny. I hear him, madam.

Ang. Leave me ; and, d'ye hear, if Valentine should come, or send, I am not to be spoken with.

[Exit Jenny.]

Enter Sir Sampson.

Sir S. I have not been honoured with the commands of a fair lady a great while.—Odd, madam, you have revived me—not since I was five and thirty.

Ang. Why, you have no great reason to complain, Sir Sampson ; that is not long ago.

Sir S. Zooks, but it is, madam, a very great while ; to a man that admires a fine woman as much as I do.

Ang. You're an absolute courtier, Sir Sampson.

Sir S. Not at all, madam. Odsbud, you wrong me: I am not so old neither, to be a bare courtier, only a man of words. Odd, I have warm blood about me yet, and can serve a lady any way.—Come, come, let me tell you, you women think a man old too soon, faith and troth you do. Come, don't despise fifty; odd, fifty, in a hale constitution, is no such contemptible age!

Ang. Fifty a contemptible age! not at all: a very fashionable age, I think—I assure you, I know very considerable beaux, that set a good face upon fifty.—Fifty! I have seen fifty in a side-box, by candle-light, out-blossom five-and-twenty.

Sir S. Outsides, outsides; a pize take them, mere outsides. Hang your side-box beaux; no, I'm none of those, none of your forced trees, that pretend to blossom in the fall; and bud when they should bring forth fruit. I am of a long-lived race, and inherit vigour. None of my ancestors married till fifty; yet they begot sons and daughters till fourscore. I am of your patriarchs, I, a branch of one of your Antediluvian families, fellows that the flood could not wash away. Well, madam, what are your commands? Has any young rogue affronted you, and shall I cut his throat? or——

Ang. No, Sir Sampson, I have no quarrel upon my hands—I have more occasion for your conduct than your courage at this time. To tell you the truth, I'm weary of living single, and want a husband.

Sir S. Odsbud, and it is pity you should!——Odd, would she would like me! then I should hamper my young rogues: odd, would she would; faith and troth, she's devilish handsome! [Aside.]——Madam, you deserve a good husband! and 'twere pity you should be thrown away upon any of these young idle rogues about the town. Odd, there's ne'er a young fellow worth hanging—that is, a very young fellow——Pize on them, they never think beforehand of any thing—and if they commit matrimony, 'tis as they commit murder; out of a frolic; and are ready to hang themselves, orto be hanged by the law the next morning.—Odsfo, have a care, madam.

Ang. Therefore I ask your advice, Sir Sampson. I have fortune

fortune enough to make any man easy that I can like ; if there were such a thing as a young agreeable man, with a reasonable stock of good-nature and sense—for I would neither have an absolute wit, nor a fool.

Sir S. Odd, you are hard to please, madam : to find a young fellow that is neither a wit in his own eye, nor a fool in the eye of the world, is a very hard task. But, faith and troth, you speak very discreetly ; for I hate both a wit and a fool.

Ang. She that marries a fool, Sir Sampson, forfeits the reputation of her honesty or understanding ; and she that marries a very witty man, is a slave to the severity and insolent conduct of her husband. I should like a man of wit for a lover, because I would have such an one in my power ; but I would no more be his wife, than his enemy ; for his malice is not a more terrible consequence of his aversion, than his jealousy is of his love.

Sir S. None of old Foresight's Sibyls ever uttered such a truth. Odsbud, you have won my heart. I hate a wit ; I had a son that was spoilt among them ; a good hopeful lad, till he learnt to be a wit—and might have risen in the state.—But, a pox on't, his wit ran him out of his money, and now his poverty has run him out of his wits.

Ang. Sir Sampson, as your friend, I must tell you, you are very much abused in that matter—he's no more mad than you are.

Sir S. How, madam ! would I could prove it !

Ang. I can tell you how that may be done—but it is a thing that would make me appear to be too much concerned in your affairs.

Sir S. Odsbud, I believe she likes me ! [Aside.]—Ah, madam, all my affairs are scarce worthy to be laid at your feet ; and I wish, madam, they were in a better posture, that I might make a more becoming offer to a lady of your incomparable beauty and merit.—If I had Peru in one hand, and Mexico in t'other, and the Eastern empire under my feet ; it would make me only a more glorious victim, to be offered at the shrine of your beauty.

Ang. Bless me, Sir Sampson, what's the matter ?

Sir S. Odd, madam, I love you—and if you would take my advice in a husband——

Ang. Hold, hold, Sir Sampson, I asked your advice for a husband, and you are giving me your consent.—I was indeed thinking to propose something like it in jest, to satisfy you about Valentine: for if a match were seemingly carried on between you and me, it would oblige him to throw off his disguise of madness, in apprehension of losing me; for, you know, he has long pretended a passion for me.

Sir S. Gadzooks, a most ingenious contrivance—if we were to go through with it! But why must the match only be seemingly carried on?—Odd, let it be a real contract.

Ang. O fie, Sir Sampson, what would the world say?

Sir S. Say? They would say you were a wise woman, and I a happy man. Odd, madam, I'll love you as long as I live; and leave you a good jointure when I die.

Ang. Ay; but that is not in your power, Sir Sampson, for when Valentine confesses himself in his senses, he must make over his inheritance to his younger brother,

Sir S. Odd, you're cunning, a wary baggage. Faith and troth, I like you the better.—But, I warrant you, I have a proviso in the obligation in favour of myself.—Body o'me, I have a trick to turn the settlement upon the issue male of our two bodies begotten. Odsbud, let us find children, and I'll find an estate!

Ang. Will you? Well, do you find the estate, and leave the other to me!

Sir S. O rogue! but I'll trust you. And will you consent? Is it a match then?

Ang. Let me consult my lawyer concerning this obligation; and if I find what you propose practicable, I'll give you my answer.

Sir S. With all my heart. Come in with me, and I'll lend you the bond.—You shall consult your lawyer, and I'll consult a parson. Odzooks, I'm a young man; Odzooks, I'm a young man, and I'll make it appear—Odd, you're devilish handsome. Faith and troth, you're very handsome; and I'm very young, and very lussy.—Odsbud, hussy, you know how to choose! and so do I.—Odd, I think we are very well met.—Give me your your hand ; odd, let me kiss it ; 'tis as warm and as soft—as what ?—odd, as t'other hand !—Give me t'other hand ; and I'll mumble them, and kiss them, till they melt in my mouth.

Ang. Hold, Sir Sampson—You're profuse of your vigour before your time. You'll spend your estate before you come to it.

Sir S. No, no, only give you a rent-roll of my possessions—Ah ! baggage !—I warrant you for little Sampson. Odd, Sampson is a very good name for an able fellow. Your Sampsons were strong dogs from the beginning.

Ang. Have a care, and don't over-act your part.—If you remember, Sampson, the strongest of the name, pulled an old house over his head at last.

Sir S. Say you so, hussy ?—Come, let's go then ; odd, I long to be pulling too. Come away—Odsó, here's somebody coming. [Exeunt.]

Enter Tattle and Jeremy.

Tatt. Is not that she, gone out just now ?

Jer. Ay, sir, she's just going to the place of appointment. Ah, sir, if you are not very faithful and close in this business, you'll certainly be the death of a person that has a most extraordinary passion for your honour's service.

Tatt. Ay, who's that ?

Jer. Even my unworthy self, sir.—Sir, I have had an appetite to be fed with your commands a great while—And now, sir, my former master having much troubled the fountain of his understanding, it is a very plausible occasion for me to quench my thirst at the spring of your bounty.—I thought I could not recommend myself better to you, sir, than by the delivery of a great beauty and fortune into your arms, whom I have heard you sigh for.

Tatt. I'll make thy fortune ; say no more.—Thou art a pretty fellow, and canst carry a message to a lady, in a pretty soft kind of phrase, and with a good persuading accent.

Jer. Sir, I have the seeds of rhetoric and oratory in my head—I have been at Cambridge.

Tatt. Ay ; 'tis well enough for a servant to be bred at an university ; but the education is a little too pedantic for a gentleman. I hope you are secret in your nature, private, close, ha?

Jer. O fir, for that, fir, 'tis my chief talent; I'm as secret as the head of Nilus.

Tatt. Ay? who's he, though? A privy-counsellor?

Jer. O ignorance! [Afide.]—A cunning Egyptian, fir, that with his arms could over-run the country, yet nobody could ever find out his head quarters.

Tatt. Close dog! a good whoremaster, I warrant him!—The time draws nigh, Jeremy, Angelica will be veiled like a nun; and I must be hooded like a friar; ha, Jeremy?

Jer. Ay, fir, hooded like a hawk, to seize at first sight upon the quarry. It is the whim of my master's madness to be so dressed; and she is so in love with him, she'll comply with any thing to please him. Poor lady! I'm sure she'll have reason to pray for me, when she finds what a happy change she has made, between a madman and so accomplished a gentleman.

Tatt. Ay, faith, so she will, Jeremy: You're a good friend to her, poor creature!—I wear I do it hardly so much in consideration of myself, as compassion to her.

Jer. 'Tis an act of charity, fir, to save a fine woman with thirty thousand pounds from throwing herself away.

Tatt. So 'tis, faith!—I might have saved several others in my time; but egad I could never find in my heart to marry any body before.

Jer. Well, fir, I'll go and tell her my master's coming; and meet you in half a quarter of an hour, with your disguise, at your own lodgings. You must talk a little madly;—she won't distinguish the tone of your voice.

Tatt. No, no, let me alone for a counterfeit.—I'll be ready for you. [Exit Jeremy.]

Enter Miss Prue.

Miss P. O, Mr. Tattle, are you here? I'm glad I have found you. I have been looking up and down for you like any thing, till I'm as tired as any thing in the world.

Tatt. O pox! how shall I get rid of this foolish girl?

Miss P. O, I have pure news, I can tell you pure news—news—

news—I must not marry the seaman now—My father says so. Why won't you be my husband? You say you love me; and you won't be my husband. And I know you may be my husband now, if you please.

Tatt. O fie, miss! who told you so, child?

Miss P. Why, my father—I told him that you loved me.

Tatt. O fie, miss! why did you do so? and who told you so, child?

Miss P. Who? Why you did; did not you?

Tatt. O pox, that was yesterday, miss; that was a great while ago, child. I have been asleep since; slept a whole night, and did not so much as dream of the matter.

Miss P. Pshaw! O but I dreamt that it was so though.

Tatt. Ay, but your father will tell you that dreams come by contraries, child. O fie! what, we must not love one another now.—Pshaw, that would be a foolish thing indeed!—Fie, fie! you're a woman now, and must think of a new man every morning, and forget him every night.—No, no, to marry is to be a child again, and play with the same rattle always: O fie, marrying is a paw thing!

Miss P. Well, but don't you love me as well as you did last night then?

Tatt. No, no, child, you would not have me.

Miss P. No? Yes but I would though.

Tatt. Pshaw, but I tell you, you would not.—You forget you are a woman, and don't know your own mind.

Miss P. But here's my father, and he knows my mind.

Enter Foresight.

For. O, Mr. Tattle, your servant, you are a close man; but methinks your love to my daughter was a secret I might have been trusted with!—or had you a mind to try if I could discover it by my art?—Hum, ha! I think there is something in your physiognomy, that has a resemblance of her; and the girl is like me.

Tatt. And so you would infer, that you and I are alike—What does the old prig mean? I'll banter him, and laugh at him, and leave him. [Aside.]—I fancy you have a wrong notion of faces.

For. How? what? a wrong notion! how so?

Tatt. In the way of art, I have some taking features, not obvious to vulgar eyes, that are indication of a sudden turn of good fortune, in the lottery of wives ; and promise a great beauty and great fortune reserved alone for me, by a private intrigue of destiny, kept secret from the piercing eye of perspicuity, from all astrologers, and the stars themselves.

For. How ? I will make it appear, that what you say is impossible.

Tatt. Sir, I beg your pardon, I am in haste—

For. For what ?

Tatt. To be married, sir—married.

For. Ay, but pray take me along with you, sir.

Tatt. No, sir ; it is to be done privately—I never make confidants.

For. Well ; but my consent, I mean—You won't marry my daughter without my consent ?

Tatt. Who, I sir ? I am an absolute stranger to you and your daughter, sir.

For. Hey-day ! What time of the moon is this ?

Tatt. Very true, sir ; and desire to continue so. I have no more love for your daughter, than I have likeness of you : and I have a secret in my heart, which you would be glad to know, and shan't know : and yet you shall know it too, and be sorry for it afterwards. I'd have you know, sir, that I am as knowing as the stars, and as secret as the night. And I'm going to be married just now, yet did not know of it half an hour ago ; and the lady stays for me, and does not know of it yet.—There's a mystery for you.—I know you love to untie difficulties. Or if you can't solve this ; stay here a quarter of an hour, and I'll come and explain it to you. [Exit.]

Miss P. O father, why will you let him go ? Won't you make him to be my husband ?

For. Mercy on us, what do these lunacies portend ? Alas ! he's mad, child, stark wild.

Miss P. What, and must not I have e'er a husband then ? What, must I go to bed to nurse again, and be a child as long as she's an old woman ? Indeed, but I won't. For, now my mind is set upon a man, I will have a man some way or other. Oh ! methinks I'm sick when I think of a man ; and if I can't have one, I would go to sleep all my life ; for when I'm awake, it makes makes me with and long, and I don't know for what—and I'd rather be always asleep, than sick with thinking.

For. O fearful! I think the girl's influenced too.—Huffy, you shall have a rod.

Miss P. A fiddle of a rod! I'll have a husband; and if you won't get me one, I'll get one for myself. I'll marry our Robin the butler: he says he loves me; and he's a handsome man, and shall be my husband: I warrant he'll be my husband, and thank me too; for he told me so.

Enter Scandal, Mrs. Foresight, and Nurse.

For. Did he so?—I'll dispatch him for it presently! Rogue!—Oh, Nurse, come hither.

Nurse. What is your worship's pleasure?

For. Here take your young mistress, and lock her up presently, till farther orders from me.—Not a word, huffy—Do what I bid you. No reply: away. And bid Robin make ready to give an account of his plate and linen, d'ye hear? Be gone, when I bid you.

[Exeunt Nurse and Miss Prue.]

Mrs. For. What's the matter, husband?

For. 'Tis not convenient to tell you now——Mr. Scandal, Heaven keep us all in our senses!—I fear there is a contagious frenzy abroad. How does Valentine?

Scand. O, I hope he will do well again.—I have a message from him to your niece Angelica.

For. I think she has not returned since she went abroad with Sir Sampson. Nurse, why are you not gone? [Enter Ben.] Here's Mr. Benjamin; he can tell us if his father be come home.

Ben. Who? Father? Ay, he's come home with a vengeance.

Mrs. For. Why, what's the matter?

Ben. Matter! Why, he's mad.

For. Mercy on us! I was afraid of this.

Ben. And there's a handsome young woman, she, as they say brother Val. went mad for, she's mad too, I think.

For. O my poor niece! my poor niece! is she gone too? Well, I shall run mad next.

Mrs.

Mrs. For. Well, but how mad? how d'ye mean?

Ben. Nay, I'll give you leave to guess—I'll undertake to make a voyage to Antigua.—no, I mayn't say so, neither—but I'll sail as far as Leghorn, and back again, before you shall guess at the matter, and do nothing else. Mess, you may take in all the points of the compass, and not hit right.

Mrs. For. Your experiment will take up a little too much time.

Ben. Why then I'll tell you: there's a new wedding upon the stocks, and they two are going to be married to rights.

Scand. Who?

Ben. Why father, and—the young woman. I can't hit of her name.

Scand. Angelica?

Ben. Ay, the same.

Mrs. For. Sir Sampson and Angelica? Impossible!

Ben. That may be—but I'm sure it is as I tell you.

Scand. 'Sdeath, it is a jest. I can't believe it.

Ben. Look you, friend; it is nothing to me, whether you believe it or no. What I say is true, d'ye see; they are married, or just going to be married, I know not which.

For. Well, but they are not mad, that is, not lunatic?

Ben. I don't know what you may call madness—but she's mad for a husband, and he's horn-mad, I think, or they'd never make a match together.—Here they come.

Enter Sir Sampson, Angelica, and Buckram.

Sir S. Where is this old Soothsayer? this uncle of mine elect?—Aha! old Foresight! uncle Foresight! with me joy, uncle Foresight, double joy, both as uncle and astrologer: here's a conjunction that was not foretold in all your Ephemeris! The brightest star in the blue firmament—is shot from above, in a jelly of love, and so forth; and I'm lord of the ascendant. Odd, you're an old fellow, Foresight, uncle I mean; a very old fellow, uncle Foresight; and yet you shall live to dance at my wedding; faith and troth you shall. Odd, we'll have the music of the spheres for thee, old Lilly, that we will; and thou shalt lead up a dance in via lactea.

For.

For. I'm thunder-struck ! You are not married to my niece ?

Sir S. Not absolutely married, uncle ; but very near it ; within a kiss of the matter, as you see.

[Kisses Angelica.

Ang. 'Tis very true indeed, uncle ; I hope you'll be my father, and give me.

Sir S. That he shall, or I'll burn his globes.—Body o'me, he shall be thy father : I'll make him thy father, and thou shalt make me a father, and I'll make thee a mother ; and we'll beget sons and daughters enough to put the weekly bills out of countenance.

Scand. Death and hell ! Where's Valentine ? [Exit.

Mrs. For. This is so surprising—

Sir S. How ! What does my aunt say ? surprising, aunt ? not at all, for a young couple to make a match in winter ! Not at all—It's a plot to undermine cold weather, and destroy that usurper of a bed called a warming-pan.

Mrs. For. I'm glad to hear you have so much fire in you, Sir Sampson.

Ben. Mefs, I fear his fire's little better than tinder ; mayhap it will only serve to light up a match for somebody else. The young woman's a handsome young woman, I can't deny it : but father, if I might be your pilot in this case, you should not marry her. It is just the same thing as if so be you should fail as far as the Streights without provision.

Sir S. Who gave you authority to speak, sirrah ? to your element, fish ; be mute, fish, and to sea. Rule your helm, sirrah ; don't direct me.

Ben. Well, well, take you care of your own helm ; or you mayn't keep your new vessel steady.

Sir S. Why, you impudent tarpawlin ! sirrah, do you bring your forecastle jests upon your father ? But I shall be even with you ; I won't give you a groat. Mr. Buckram, is the conveyance so worded, that nothing can possibly descend to this scoundrel ? I would not so much as have him have the prospect of an estate, though there were no way to come to it, but by the north-east passage.

Buck.

Buck. Sir, it is drawn according to your directions ; there is not the least cranny of the law unstopt.

Ben. Lawyer, I believe there's many a cranny and leak unstopt in your conscience !—If so be that one had a pump to your bosom, I believe we should discover a foul hold. They say a witch will sail in a sieve—but I believe the devil would not venture aboard your conscience. And that's for you.

Sir S. Hold your tongue, sirrah.—How now ? who's here ?

Enter Tattle, and Mrs. Frail.

Mrs. F. O, sister, the most unlucky accident !

Mrs. For. What's the matter ?

Tatt. O the two most unfortunate poor creatures in the world we are !

For. Bless us ! how so ?

Mrs. F. Ah, Mr. Tattle and I, poor Mr. Tattle and I are—I can't speak it out.

Tatt. Nor I——But poor Mrs. Frail and I are——

Mrs. F. Married.

For. Married ! How ?

Tatt. Suddenly——before we knew where we were—that villain Jeremy, by the help of disguises, trick'd us into one another.

For. Why, you told me just now, you went hence in haste to be married !

Ang. But, I believe Mr. Tattle meant the favour to me, I thank him.

Tatt. I did, as I hope to be saved, madam ; my intentions were good.——But this is the most cruel thing, to marry one does not know how, nor why, nor wherefore.—The devil take me, if ever I was so much concerned at any thing in my life.

Ang. 'Tis very unhappy, if you don't care for one another.

Tatt. The least in the world——that is, for my part, I speak for myself. Gad, I never had the least thought of serious kindness—I never liked any body less in my life. Poor woman ! Gad, I'm sorry for her too ; for I have no reason to hate her neither ; but I believe I shall lead her a damned sort of a life.

Mrs. For. He's better than no husband at all—though he's a coxcomb.

[To Frail.

Mrs. F. [to her]. Ay, ay, it's well it's no worse.—Nay, for my part, I always despised Mr. Tattle of all things; nothing but his being my husband could have made me like him less.

Tatt. Look you there, I thought as much!—Pox on't, I wish we could keep it secret; why I don't believe any of this company would speak of it.

Ben. If you suspect me, friend, I'll go out of the room.

Mrs. F. But, my dear, that's impossible; the parson and that rogue Jeremy will publish it.

Tatt. Ay, my dear, so they will, as you say.

Ang. O you'll agree very well in a little time; custom will make it easy for you.

Tatt. Easy! Pox on't, I don't believe I shall sleep to-night.

Sir S. Sleep, quotha! No, why, you would not sleep on your wedding night? I'm an older fellow than you, and don't mean to sleep.

Ben. Why, there's another match now, as thof a couple of privateers were looking for a prize, and should fall foul of one another. I'm sorry for the young man with all my heart. Look you, friend, if I may advise you, when she's going—for that you must expect, I have experience of her—when she's going, let her go. For no matrimony is tough enough to hold her; and if she can't drag her anchor along with her, she'll break her cable, I can tell you that.—Who's here? the madman?

Enter Valentine, Scandal, and Jeremy.

Val. No; here's the fool; and, if occasion be, I'll give it under my hand.

Sir S. How now?

Val. Sir, I'm come to acknowledge my errors, and ask your pardon.

Sir S. What, have you found your senses at last then? In good time, fir.

Val. You were abused, fir; I never was distracted.

For. How? not mad! Mr. Scandal?

Scand. No, really, fir; I'm his witness, it was all counterfeit.

Val. I thought I had reasons—but it was a poor contrivance: the effect has shewn it such.

Sir S. Contrivance! what to cheat me? to cheat your father! Sirrah, could you hope to prosper?

Val. Indeed, I thought, fir, when the father endeavoured to undo the son, it was a reasonable return of nature.

Sir S. Very good, fir.—Mr. Buckram, are you ready?—Come, fir, will you sign and seal?

Val. If you please, fir; but first I would ask this lady one question.

Sir S. Sir, you must ask me leave first.—That lady! No, fir; you shall ask that lady no questions, till you have asked her blessing, fir; that lady is to be my wife.

Val. I have heard as much, fir; but I would have it from her own mouth.

Sir S. That's as much as to say, I lie, fir; and you don't believe what I say.

Val. Pardon me, fir. But I reflect that I very lately counterfeited madness: I don't know but the frolic may go round.

Sir S. Come, chuck, satisfy him, answer him.—Come, Mr. Buckram, the pen and ink.

Buck. Here it is, fir, with the deed; all is ready.

[Val. goes to Ang.

Ang. 'Tis true, you have a great while pretended love to me; nay, what if you were sincere? Still you must pardon me, if I think my own inclinations have a better right to dispose of my person, than yours.

Sir S. Are you answered now, fir?

Val. Yes, fir.

Sir S. Where's your plot, fir? and your contrivance now, fir? Will you sign, fir? Come, will you sign and seal?

Val. With all my heart, fir.

Scand. 'Sdeath, you are not mad indeed? to ruin yourself?

Val. I have been disappointed of my only hope; and he that loses hope may part with any thing. I never valued fortune, but as it was subservient to my pleasure; and my only pleasure was to please this lady: I have made many vain attempts; and find at all that nothing

but

but my ruin can effect it; which, for that reason, I will sign to.—Give me the paper.

Ang. Generous Valentine! [Aside.]

Buck. Here is the deed, sir.

Val. But where is the bond, by which I am obliged to sign this?

Buck. Sir Sampson, you have it.

Ang. No, I have it; and I'll use it, as I would every thing that is an enemy to Valentine. [Tears the paper.]

Sir S. How now?

Val. Ha!

Ang. Had I the world to give you, it could not make me worthy of so generous and faithful a passion. Here's my hand; my heart was always yours, and struggled very hard to make this utmost trial of your virtue.

[To Val.]

Val. Between pleasure and amazement, I am lost—but on my knees I take the blessing.

Sir S. Oons, what is the meaning of this?

Ben. Mefs, here's the wind changed again. Father, you and I may make a voyage together now!

Ang. Well, Sir Sampson, since I have played you a trick, I'll advise you how you may avoid such another. Learn to be a good father, or you'll never get a second wife. I always loved your son, and hated your unforgiving nature. I was resolved to try him to the utmost; I have tried you too, and know you both. You have not more faults than he has virtues; and it is hardly more pleasure to me, that I can make him and myself happy, than that I can punish you.

Val. If my happiness could receive addition, this kind surprise would make it double.

Sir S. Oons, you're a crocodile!

For. Really, Sir Sampson, this is a sudden eclipse.

Sir S. You're an illiterate old fool; and I'm another.

Tatt. If the gentleman is in disorder for want of a wife, I can spare him mine.—Oh, are you there, sir? I am indebted to you for my happiness. [To Jeremy.]

Jer. Sir, I ask you ten thousand pardons: it was an arrant mistake.—You see, sir, my master was never mad, nor any thing like it.—Then how can it be otherwise?

Val. Tattle, I thank you; you would have interposed between me and heaven ; but Providence laid purgatory in your way. You have but justice.

Scand. I hear the fiddles that Sir Sampson provided for his own wedding ; methinks it is pity they should not be employed when the match is so much mended. Valentine, though it be morning, we may have a dance.

Val. Any thing, my friend ; every thing that looks like joy and transport.

Scand. Call them, Jeremy.

Ang. I have done dissembling now, Valentine ; and if that coldness which I have always worn before you should turn to an extreme fondness, you must not suspect it.

Val. I'll prevent that suspicion—for I intend to doat to that immoderate degree, that your fondness shall never distinguish itself enough to be taken notice of. If ever you seem to love too much, it must be only when I can't love enough.

Ang. Have a care of promises : you know you are apt to run more in debt than you are able to pay.

Val. Therefore I yield my body as your prisoner, and make your best on't.

Scand. The music stays for you. [A dance.]

[To Ang.] Well, madam, you have done exemplary justice, in punishing an inhuman father, and rewarding a faithful lover : but there is a third good work, which I, in particular, must thank you for : I was an infidel to your sex, and you have converted me—for now I am convinced that all women are not, like fortune, blind in bestowing favours, either on those who do not merit, or who do not want them.

Ang. It is an unreasonable accusation, that you lay upon our sex. You tax us with injustice, only to cover your own want of merit. You would all have the reward of love ; but few have the constancy to stay till it becomes your due. Men are generally hypocrites and infidels ;—they pretend to worship, but have neither zeal nor faith. How few, like Valentine, would persevere even to martyrdom, and sacrifice their interest to their constancy ! In admiring me, you misplace the novelty.

The miracle to-day is, that we find

A lover true : not that a woman's kind.
